PERSONAL MEMOIRS

OF

U. S. GRANT
Copyright, 1885, by
ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Copyright, 1895, by JULIA D. GRANT.
Table of Contents

Vol. II

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chapter I. Preparations for Battle — Thomas carries the First Line of the Enemy — Sherman carries Missionary Ridge — Battle of Lookout Mountain — General Hooker's Fight</th>
<th>1</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Chapter II. Battle of Chattanooga — A Gallant Charge — Complete Rout of the Enemy — Pursuit of the Confederates — General Bragg — Remarks on Chattanooga</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chapter III. The Relief of Knoxville — Headquarters moved to Nashville — Visiting Knoxville — Cipher Despatches — Withholding Orders</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chapter IV. Operations in Mississippi — Longstreet in East Tennessee — Commissioned Lieutenant-General — Commanding the Armies of the United States — First Interview with President Lincoln</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chapter V. The Military Situation — Plans for the Campaign — Sheridan assigned to Command of the Cavalry — Flank Movements — Forrest at Fort Pillow — General Banks's Expedition — Colonel Mosby — An Incident of the Wilderness Campaign</td>
<td>53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chapter</td>
<td>Title</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>---------</td>
<td>----------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VI</td>
<td>Commencement of the Grand Campaign—General Butler's Position—Sheridan's First Raid</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VII</td>
<td>Sherman's Campaign in Georgia—Siege of Atlanta—Death of General McPherson—Attempt to Capture Andersonville—Capture of Atlanta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VIII</td>
<td>Grand Movement of the Army of the Potomac—Crossing the Rapidan—Entering the Wilderness—Battle of the Wilderness</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IX</td>
<td>After the Battle—Telegraph and Signal Service—Movement by the Left Flank</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X</td>
<td>Battle of Spotsylvania—Hancock's Position—Assault of Warren's and Wright's Corps—Upton promoted on the Field—Good News from Butler and Sheridan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XI</td>
<td>Hancock's Assault—Losses of the Confederates—Promotions recommended—Discomfiture of the Enemy—Ewell's Attack—Reducing the Artillery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII</td>
<td>Movement by the Left Flank—Battle of North Anna—An Incident of the March—Moving on Richmond—South of the Pamunkey—Position of the National Army</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XIII</td>
<td>Advance on Cold Harbor—An Anecdote of the War—Battle of Cold Harbor—Correspondence with Lee—Retrospective</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XIV</td>
<td>Left-flank Movement across the Chickahominy and James—General Lee—Visit</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

IX

TO BUTLER—THE MOVEMENT ON PETERSBURG—THE INVESTMENT OF PETERSBURG . . . . 174

CHAPTER XV. RAID ON THE VIRGINIA CENTRAL RAILROAD—RAID ON THE WELDON RAILROAD—EARLY’S MOVEMENT UPON WASHINGTON—MINING THE WORKS BEFORE PETERSBURG—EXPLOSION OF THE MINE BEFORE PETERSBURG—CAMPAIGN IN THE SHENANDOAH VALLEY—CAPTURE OF THE WELDON RAILROAD . . . . . . . . . . . . . . 192

CHAPTER XVI. SHERIDAN’S ADVANCE—VISIT TO SHERIDAN—SHERIDAN’S VICTORY IN THE SHENANDOAH—SHERIDAN’S RIDE TO WINCHESTER—CLOSE OF THE CAMPAIGN FOR THE WINTER . . . . . 213

CHAPTER XVII. THE CAMPAIGN IN GEORGIA—SHERMAN’S MARCH TO THE SEA—WAR ANECDOTES—THE MARCH ON SAVANNAH—INVESTMENT OF SAVANNAH—CAPTURE OF SAVANNAH . . . . . . 227

CHAPTER XVIII. THE BATTLE OF FRANKLIN—THE BATTLE OF NASHVILLE . . . . . . 254

CHAPTER XIX. EXPEDITION AGAINST FORT FISHER—ATTACK ON THE FORT—FAILURE OF THE EXPEDITION—SECOND EXPEDITION AGAINST THE FORT—CAPTURE OF FORT FISHER . . . . . . 261

CHAPTER XX. SHERMAN’S MARCH NORTH—SHERIDAN ORDERED TO LYNCHBURG—CANBY ORDERED TO MOVE AGAINST MOBILE—MOVEMENTS OF SCHOFIELD AND THOMAS—CAPTURE OF COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA—SHERMAN IN THE CAROLINAS . . . . . 271

CHAPTER XXI. ARRIVAL OF THE PEACE COMMISSIONERS—LINCOLN AND THE PEACE COMMISSIONERS—AN ANECDOTE OF LINCOLN—THE WINTER BEFORE
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chapter</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>XXII.</td>
<td>Interview with Sheridan—Grand Movement of the Army of the Potomac—Sheridan's Advance on Five Forks—Battle of Five Forks—Parke and Wright storm the Enemy's Lines—Battles before Petersburg.</td>
<td>287</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXIII.</td>
<td>The Capture of Petersburg—Meeting President Lincoln in Petersburg—The Capture of Richmond—Pursuing the Enemy—Visit to Sheridan and Meade.</td>
<td>300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXIV.</td>
<td>Battle of Sailor's Creek—Engagement at Farmville—Correspondence with General Lee—Sheridan intercepts the Enemy.</td>
<td>314</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXV.</td>
<td>Negotiations at Appomattox—Interview with Lee at McLean's House—The Terms of Surrender—Lee's Surrender—Interview with Lee after the Surrender.</td>
<td>328</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXVI.</td>
<td>Morale of the Two Armies—Relative Conditions of the North and South—President Lincoln visits Richmond—Arrival at Washington—President Lincoln's Assassination—President Johnson's Policy.</td>
<td>337</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Petersburg—Sheridan destroys the Railroad—Gordon carries the Picket-line—Parke recaptures the Line—The Battle of White Oak Road.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chapter</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>XXVIII.</td>
<td>The End of the War—The March to Washington—One of Lincoln's Anecdotes—Grand Review at Washington—Characteristics of Lincoln and Stanton—Estimate of the Different Corps Commanders</td>
<td>373</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>386</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Appendix</td>
<td>397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Index</td>
<td>461</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
LIST OF MAPS AND ILLUSTRATIONS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>U. S. Grant, General Retired</th>
<th>Frontispiece</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Map of the Battle-field of Chattanooga</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of Operations in Mississippi</td>
<td>42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lieutenant-General U. S. Grant</td>
<td>56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Facsimile of Lincoln’s “God-speed” to Grant</td>
<td>64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of Operations at Drewry’s Bluff, Bermuda Hundred, and Deep Bottom</td>
<td>72</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of the Atlanta Campaign</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map illustrating the Siege of Atlanta, Georgia</td>
<td>92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>From the Rapidan to Richmond</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of the Wilderness</td>
<td>104</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of the Country between the Wilderness and Spottsylvania Court House</td>
<td>120</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of Spottsylvania Court House</td>
<td>128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of the Virginia Campaigns of 1864–65</td>
<td>136</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of North Anna</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Field of Operations between the Pamunkey and James Rivers</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of the Kilpatrick–Dahlgren and Sheridan Raids</td>
<td>161</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of Cold Harbor</td>
<td>164</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>General Grant and Staff at Bethesda Church</td>
<td>168</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>General Grant at Headquarters during the Virginia Campaign</td>
<td>184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of Richmond</td>
<td>200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of the Shenandoah Valley Campaign</td>
<td>216</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>General Grant, Mrs. Grant, and Master Jesse at Headquarters at City Point</td>
<td>224</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>From Atlanta to Savannah</td>
<td>240</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

xiii
LIST OF MAPS AND ILLUSTRATIONS

Map of Franklin and Nashville ........................................ 258
Sketch of Vicinity of Fort Fisher .................................... 262
Map of Sherman's Route through the Carolinas ............... 276
Map of Petersburg and Five Forks ................................. 304
Map of the Petersburg and Appomattox Campaigns .......... 316
Map of Jetersville and Sailor’s Creek ......................... 328
Map of High Bridge and Farmville ............................ 332
McLean's House, Appomattox Court House ................... 338
Map of Appomattox Court House ................................ 340
The Surrender at Appomattox ..................................... 344 Facsimile of General Grant's Despatch announcing the Surrender of General Lee ........................................... 348
Right Profile of General Grant, 1875 ............................. 368
Left Profile of General Grant, 1875 .............................. 384 Important Battles of the Civil War .......................... 396
CHAPTER I

PREPARATIONS FOR BATTLE—THOMAS CARRIES THE FIRST LINE OF THE ENEMY—SHERMAN CARRIES MISSIONARY RIDGE—BATTLE OF LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN—GENERAL HOOKER'S FIGHT

On the 20th, when so much was occurring to discourage,—rains falling so heavily as to delay the passage of troops over the river at Brown's ferry, and threatening the entire breaking of the bridge; news coming of a battle raging at Knoxville, and of Wilcox being threatened by a force from the east,—a letter was received from Bragg which contained these words: "As there may still be some non-combatants in Chattanooga, I deem it proper to notify you that prudence would dictate their early withdrawal." Of course I understood that this was a device intended to deceive; but I did not know what the intended deception was. On the 22d, however, a deserter came in who informed me that...
Bragg was leaving our front, and on that day Buckner's division was sent to reinforce Longstreet at Knoxville, and another division started to follow, but was recalled. The object of Bragg's letter, no doubt, was in some way to detain me until Knoxville could be captured and his troops there be returned to Chattanooga.

During the night of the 21st the rest of the pontoon-boats, completed, one hundred and sixteen in all, were carried up to and placed in the North Chickamauga. The material for the roadway over these was deposited out of view of the enemy within a few hundred yards of the bank of the Tennessee, where the north end of the bridge was to rest.

Hearing nothing from Burnside, and hearing much of the distress in Washington on his account, I could no longer defer operations for his relief. I determined, therefore, to do on the 23d, with the Army of the Cumberland, what had been intended to be done on the 24th.

The position occupied by the Army of the Cumberland had been made very strong for defense during the months it had been besieged. The line was about a mile from the town, and extended from Citico Creek—a small stream running near the base of Missionary Ridge and emptying into the Tennessee about two miles below the mouth of the South Chickamauga—on the left to Chattanooga Creek on the right. All commanding points on the line were well fortified and well equipped with artillery. The important elevations within the line had all been carefully fortified and supplied with a proper armament. Among the elevations so fortified was one to the east of the town, named Fort Wood.
Wood. It owed its importance chiefly to the fact that it lay between the town and Missionary Ridge, where most of the strength of the enemy was. Fort Wood had in it twenty-two pieces of artillery, most of which would reach the nearer points of the enemy's line. On the morning of the 23d, Thomas, according to instructions, moved Granger's corps of two divisions, Sheridan and T. J. Wood commanding, to the foot of Fort Wood, and formed them into line as if going on parade, Sheridan on the right, Wood to the left, extending to or near Citico Creek. Palmer, commanding the Fourteenth Corps, held that part of our line facing south and southwest. He supported Sheridan with one division (Baird's), while his other division, under Johnson, remained in the trenches, under arms, ready to be moved to any point. Howard's corps was moved in rear of the center. The picket-lines were within a few hundred yards of each other. At two o'clock in the afternoon all were ready to advance. By this time the clouds had lifted so that the enemy could see from his elevated position all that was going on. The signal for advance was given by a booming of cannon from Fort Wood and other points on the line. The rebel pickets were soon driven back upon the main guards, which occupied minor and detached heights between the main ridge and our lines. These, too, were carried before halting, and before the enemy had time to reinforce their advance guards. But it was not without loss on both sides. This movement secured to us a line fully a mile in advance of the one we occupied in the morning, and the one which the enemy had occupied up to this time. The fortifications were rapidly turned to face the other way. During the following night they were made strong. We lost in this preliminary action about eleven hundred killed and wounded, while the enemy probably lost quite as heavily, including the prisoners that were captured. With the exception of the firing of artillery, kept up from Missionary Ridge and Fort Wood until night closed in, this ended the fighting for the first day.

The advantage was greatly on our side now, and if I could only have been assured that Burnside could hold out ten days longer I should have rested more easily. But we were doing the best we could for him and the cause.

By the night of the 23d Sherman's command was in a position to move, though one division (Osterhaus's) had not yet crossed the river at Brown's ferry. The continuous rise in the Tennessee had rendered it impossible to keep the bridge at that point in condition for troops to cross; but I was determined to move that night even without this division. Orders were sent to Osterhaus, accordingly, to report to Hooker if he could not cross by eight o'clock on the morning of the 24th. Because of the break in the bridge, Hooker's orders were again changed, but this time only back to those first given to him.

General W. F. Smith had been assigned to duty as Chief Engineer of the Military Division. To him were given the general direction of moving troops by the boats from the North Chickamauga, laying the bridge after they reached their position, and generally all the duties pertaining to his office of chief engineer. During the night General Morgan
MAP OF THE BATTLE-FIELD
OF CHATTANOOGA.

UNITED STATES FORCES
CONFEDERATE
L. Smith's division was marched to the point where the pontoons were, and the brigade of Giles A. Smith was selected for the delicate duty of manning the boats and surprising the enemy's pickets on the south bank of the river. During this night, also, General J. M. Brannan, chief of artillery, moved forty pieces of artillery, belonging to the Army of the Cumberland, and placed them on the north side of the river so as to command the ground opposite, to aid in protecting the approach to the point where the south end of the bridge was to rest. He had to use Sherman's artillery horses for this purpose, Thomas having none.

At two o'clock in the morning, November 24th, Giles A. Smith pushed out from the North Chickamauga with his one hundred and sixteen boats, each loaded with thirty brave and well-armed men. The boats with their precious freight dropped down quietly with the current to avoid attracting the attention of any one who could convey information to the enemy, until arriving near the mouth of the South Chickamauga. Here a few boats were landed, the troops debarked, and a rush was made upon the picket-guard known to be at that point. The guard were surprised and twenty of their number captured. The remainder of the troops effected a landing at the point where the bridge was to start, with equally good results. The work of ferrying over Sherman's command from the north side of the Tennessee was at once commenced, using the pontoons for the purpose. A steamer was also brought up from the town to assist. The rest of M. L. Smith's division came first, then the division of John E. Smith. The troops as they landed were put to work intrenching their position. By daylight the two entire divisions were over and well covered by the works they had built.

The work of laying the bridge on which to cross the artillery and cavalry was now begun. The ferrying over the infantry was continued with the steamer and the pontoons, taking the pontoons, however, as fast as they were wanted to put in their place in the bridge. By a little past noon the bridge was completed, as well as one over the South Chickamauga, connecting the troops left on that side with their comrades below, and all the infantry and artillery were on the south bank of the Tennessee.

Sherman at once formed his troops for assault on Missionary Ridge. By one o'clock he started with M. L. Smith on his left, keeping nearly the course of Chickamauga River; J. E. Smith next to the right and a little to the rear; and Ewing still farther to the right and also a little to the rear of J. E. Smith’s command, in column, ready to deploy to the right if an enemy should come from that direction. A good skirmish-line preceded each of these columns. Soon the foot of the hill was reached; the skirmishers pushed directly up, followed closely by their supports. By half-past three Sherman was in possession of the height without having sustained much loss. A brigade from each division was now brought up, and artillery was dragged to the top of the hill by hand. The enemy did not seem to be aware of this movement until the top of the hill was gained. There had been a drizzling rain during the day, and the clouds were so low that Lookout Mountain and the top of Missionary Ridge were obscured from the view of persons in the valley. But now the enemy opened fire upon their assailants, and made several attempts with their skirmishers to drive them away, but without avail. Later in the day a more determined attack was made, but this, too, failed, and Sherman was left to fortify what he had gained.

Sherman's cavalry took up its line of march soon after the bridge was completed, and by half-past three the whole of it was over both bridges and on its way to strike the enemy's communications at Chickamauga station. All of Sherman's command was now south of the Tennessee. During the afternoon General Giles A. Smith was severely wounded and carried from the field.

Thomas having done on the 23d what was expected of him on the 24th, there was nothing for him to do this day except to strengthen his position. Howard, however, effected a crossing of Citico Creek and a junction with Sherman, and was directed to report to him. With two or three regiments of his command he moved in the morning along the banks of the Tennessee, and reached the point where the bridge was being laid. He went out on the bridge as far as it was completed from the south end, and saw Sherman superintending the work from the north side and moving himself south as fast as an additional boat was put in and the roadway put upon it. Howard reported to his new chief across the chasm between them, which was now narrow and in a few minutes closed.

While these operations were going on to the east of Chattanooga, Hooker was engaged on the west. He had three divisions: Osterhaus's, of the Fifteenth Corps, Army of the Tennessee; Geary's, Twelfth Corps, Army of the Potomac; and Cruft's, Fourteenth Corps, Army of the Cumberland. Geary was on the right at Wauhatchie, Cruft at the center, and Osterhaus near Brown's ferry. These troops were all west of Lookout Creek. The enemy had the east bank of the creek strongly picketed and intrenched, and three brigades of troops in the rear to reinforce them if attacked. These brigades occupied the summit of the mountain. General Carter L. Stevenson was in command of the whole. Why any troops, except artillery with a small infantry guard, were kept on the mountain-top I do not see. A hundred men could have held the summit—which is a palisade for more than thirty feet down—against the assault of any number of men from the position Hooker occupied.

The side of Lookout Mountain confronting Hooker's command was rugged, heavily timbered, and full of chasms, making it difficult to advance with troops, even in the absence of an opposing force. Farther up the ground becomes more even and level, and was in cultivation. On the east side the slope is much more gradual, and a good wagon-road zigzagging up it connects the town of Chattanooga with the summit.

Early on the morning of the 24th Hooker moved Geary's division, supported by a brigade of Cruft's, up Lookout Creek, to effect a crossing. The remainder of Cruft's division was to seize the bridge over the creek, near the crossing of the railroad. Osterhaus was to move up to the bridge and cross it. The bridge was seized by Grose's brigade after a slight skirmish with the pickets guarding it.
This attracted the enemy, so that Geary’s movement farther up was not observed. A heavy mist obscured him from the view of the troops on the top of the mountain. He crossed the creek almost unobserved, and captured the picket of over forty men on guard near by. He then commenced ascending the mountain directly in his front. By this time the enemy was seen coming down from his camps on the mountain slope and filing into his rifle-pits to contest the crossing of the bridge. By eleven o’clock the bridge was complete. Osterhaus was up, and after some sharp skirmishing the enemy was driven away with considerable loss in killed and captured.

While the operations at the bridge were progressing, Geary was pushing up the hill over great obstacles, resisted by the enemy directly in his front, and in face of the guns on top of the mountain. The enemy, seeing his left flank and rear menaced, gave way, and was followed by Cruft and Osterhaus. Soon these were up abreast of Geary, and the whole command pushed up the hill, driving the enemy in advance. By noon Geary had gained the open ground on the north slope of the mountain, with his right close up to the base of the upper palisade; but there were strong fortifications in his front. The rest of the command coming up, a line was formed from the base of the upper palisade to the mouth of Chattanooga Creek.

Thomas and I were on the top of Orchard Knob. Hooker’s advance now made our line a continuous one. It was in full view, extending from the Tennessee River, where Sherman had crossed, up Chickamauga River to the base of Missionary Ridge, over the top of the north end of the ridge to Chattanooga Valley, then along parallel to the ridge a mile or more, across the valley to the mouth of Chattanooga Creek, thence up the slope of Lookout Mountain to the foot of the upper palisade. The day was hazy, so that Hooker's operations were not visible to us except at moments when the clouds would rise, but the sound of his artillery and musketry was heard incessantly. The enemy on his front was partially fortified, but was soon driven out of his works. During the afternoon the clouds, which had so obscured the top of Lookout all day as to hide whatever was going on from the view of those below, settled down and made it so dark where Hooker was as to stop operations for the time. At four o'clock Hooker reported his position as impregnable. By a little after five direct communication was established, and a brigade of troops was sent from Chattanooga to reinforce him. These troops had to cross Chattanooga Creek, and met with some opposition, but soon overcame it, and by night the commander, General Carlin, reported to Hooker and was assigned to his left. I now telegraphed to Washington: "The fight to-day progressed favorably. Sherman carried the end of Missionary Ridge, and his right is now at the tunnel, and his left at Chickamanga Creek. Troops from Lookout Valley carried the point of the mountain, and now hold the eastern slope and a point high up. Hooker reports two thousand prisoners taken, besides which a small number have fallen into our hands from Missionary Ridge." The next day the President replied: "Your despatches as to fighting on Monday and Tuesday are here.
Well done. Many thanks to all. Remember Burnside.” And Halleck also telegraphed: “I congratulate you on the success thus far of your plans. I fear that General Burnside is hard pushed, and that any further delay may prove fatal. I know that you will do all in your power to relieve him.”

The division of Jefferson C. Davis, Army of the Cumberland, had been sent to the North Chickamauga to guard the pontoons as they were deposited in the river, and to prevent all ingress or egress of citizens. On the night of the 24th his division, having crossed with Sherman, occupied our extreme left from the upper bridge over the plain to the north base of Missionary Ridge. Firing continued to a late hour in the night, but it was not connected with an assault at any point.
CHAPTER II

BATTLE OF CHATTANOOGA—A GALLANT CHARGE—COMPLETE ROUT OF THE ENEMY—PURSUIT OF THE CONFEDERATES—GENERAL BRAGG—REMARKS ON CHATTANOOGA

At twelve o'clock at night, when all was quiet, I began to give orders for the next day, and sent a despatch to Willecox to encourage Burnside. Sherman was directed to attack at daylight. Hooker was ordered to move at the same hour, and endeavor to intercept the enemy's retreat if he still remained; if he had gone, then to move directly to Rossville and operate against the left and rear of the force on Missionary Ridge. Thomas was not to move until Hooker had reached Missionary Ridge. As I was with him on Orchard Knob, he would not move without further orders from me.

The morning of the 25th opened clear and bright, and the whole field was in full view from the top of Orchard Knob. It remained so all day. Bragg's headquarters were in full view, and officers—presumably staff-officers—could be seen coming and going constantly.

The point of ground which Sherman had carried on the 24th was almost disconnected from the main ridge occupied by the enemy. A low pass, over which there is a wagon-road crossing the hill, and near which there is a railroad tunnel, intervenes between the two hills. The problem now was to get to the main ridge. The enemy was fortified on the point; and back farther, where the ground was still higher, was a second fortification commanding the first. Sherman was out as soon as it was light enough to see, and by sunrise his command was in motion. Three brigades held the hill already gained. Morgan L. Smith moved along the east base of Missionary Ridge; Loomis along the west base, supported by two brigades of John E. Smith's division; and Corse with his brigade was between the two, moving directly toward the hill to be captured. The ridge is steep and heavily wooded on the east side, where M. L. Smith's troops were advancing, but cleared and with a more gentle slope on the west side. The troops advanced rapidly and carried the extreme end of the rebel works. Morgan L. Smith advanced to a point which cut the enemy off from the railroad-bridge and the means of bringing up supplies by rail from Chickamauga station, where the main depot was located. The enemy made brave and strenuous efforts to drive our troops from the position we had gained, but without success. The contest lasted for two hours. Corse, a brave and efficient commander, was badly wounded in this assault. Sherman now threatened both Bragg's flank and his stores, and made it necessary for him to weaken other points of his line to strengthen his right. From the position I occupied I could see column after column of Bragg's forces moving against Sherman. Every Confederate gun that could be brought to bear upon the Union forces was concentrated upon him. J. E. Smith, with two brigades, charged up the west side of the ridge to the support of Corse's command, over open ground and in the face of a heavy fire of both artillery and musketry, and reached the very parapet of the enemy. He lay here for a time, but the enemy coming with a heavy force upon his right flank, he was compelled to fall back, followed by the foe. A few hundred yards brought Smith's troops into a wood, where they were speedily reformed, when they charged and drove the attacking party back to his intrenchments.

Seeing the advance, repulse, and second advance of J. E. Smith from the position I occupied, I directed Thomas to send a division to reinforce him. Baird's division was accordingly sent from the right of Orchard Knob. It had to march a considerable distance directly under the eyes of the enemy to reach its position. Bragg at once commenced massing in the same direction. This was what I wanted. But it had now got to be late in the afternoon, and I had expected before this to see Hooker crossing the ridge in the neighborhood of Rossville and compelling Bragg to mass in that direction also.

The enemy had evacuated Lookout Mountain during the night, as I expected he would. In crossing the valley he burned the bridge over Chattanooga Creek, and did all he could to obstruct the roads behind him. Hooker was off bright and early, with no obstructions in his front but distance and the destruction above named. He was detained four hours crossing Chattanooga Creek, and thus was lost the immediate advantage I expected from his forces. His reaching Bragg's flank and extending across it was to be the signal for Thomas's assault of the ridge. But Sherman's condition was getting so critical that the assault for his relief could not be delayed any longer.

Sheridan's and Wood's divisions had been lying under arms from early morning, ready to move the instant the signal was given. I now directed Thomas to order the charge at once. I watched eagerly to see the effect, and became impatient at last that there was no indication of any charge being made. The center of the line which was to make the charge was near where Thomas and I stood, but concealed from view by an intervening forest. Turning to Thomas to inquire what caused the delay, I was surprised to see Thomas J. Wood, one of the division commanders who was to make the charge, standing talking to him. I spoke to General Wood, asking him why he did not charge as ordered an hour before. He replied very promptly that this was the first he had heard of it, but that he had been ready all day to move at a moment's notice. I told him to make the charge at once. He was off in a moment, and in an incredibly short time loud cheering was heard, and he and Sheridan were driving the enemy's advance before them toward Missionary Ridge. The Confederates were strongly intrenched on the crest of the ridge in front of us, and had a second line half-way down and another at the base. Our men drove the troops in front of the lower line of rifle-pits so rapidly, and followed them so closely, that rebel and Union troops went over the first line of works almost at the same time. Many rebels were captured and sent to the rear under the fire of their own friends higher up the hill. Those that were not captured retreated, and were pursued. The retreating hordes being between friends and pursuers caused the enemy to fire high to avoid killing their own men. In fact, on that occasion the Union soldier nearest the enemy was in the safest position. Without awaiting further orders or stopping to reform, on our troops went to the second line of works; over that and on for the crest—thus effectually carrying out my orders of the 18th for the battle and of the 24th for this charge.

1 In this order authority was given for the troops to reform after taking the first line of rifle-pits, preparatory to carrying the ridge.—U. S. G.

I watched their progress with intense interest. The fire along the rebel line was terrific. Cannon- and musket-balls filled the air; but the damage done was in small proportion to the ammunition expended. The pursuit continued until the crest was reached, and soon our men were seen climbing over the Confederate barriers at different points in front of both Sheridan’s and Wood’s divisions. The retreat of the enemy along most of his line was either carry the rifle-pits and ridge directly in front of them, or move to the left, as the presence of the enemy may require. If Hooker’s position on the mountain [cannot be maintained] with a small force, and it is found impracticable to carry the top from where he is, it would be advisable for him to move up the valley with all the force he can spare, and ascend by the first practicable road.

U. S. GRANT,
Major-General

1 CHATTANOOGA, Nov. 24, 1863.

W.R. XXXI
Maj.-Gen. Geo. H. Thomas, Chattanooga:

General Sherman carried Missionary Ridge as far as the tunnel with only slight skirmishing. His right now rests at the tunnel and on top of the hill, his left at Chickamauga Creek. I have instructed General Sherman to advance as soon as it is light in the morning, and your attack, which will be simultaneous, will be in cooperation. Your command will precipitate, and the panic so great that Bragg and his officers lost all control over their men. Many were captured, and thousands threw away their arms in their flight.

Sheridan pushed forward until he reached the Chickamauga River at a point above where the enemy crossed. He met some resistance from troops occupying a second hill in rear of Missionary Ridge, probably to cover the retreat of the main body and of the artillery and trains. It was now getting dark, but Sheridan, without halting on that account, pushed his men forward up this second hill slowly and without attracting the attention of the men placed to defend it, while he detached to the right and left to surround the position. The enemy discovered the movement before these dispositions were complete, and beat a hasty retreat, leaving artillery, wagon-trains, and many prisoners in our hands. To Sheridan's prompt movement the Army of the Cumberland, and the nation, are indebted for the bulk of the capture of prisoners, artillery, and small arms that day. Except for his prompt pursuit so much in this way would not have been accomplished.

While the advance up Missionary Ridge was going forward, General Thomas with staff, General Gordon Granger, commander of the corps making the assault, and myself and staff occupied Orchard Knob, from which the entire field could be observed. The moment the troops were seen going over the last line of rebel defenses I ordered Granger to join his command, and mounting my horse I rode to the front. General Thomas left about the same time. Sheridan, on the extreme right, was already in pursuit of the enemy east of the ridge. Wood, who commanded the division to the left of Sheridan, accompanied his men on horseback in the charge, but did not join Sheridan in the pursuit. To the left, in Baird’s front, where Bragg’s troops had massed against Sherman, the resistance was more stubborn and the contest lasted longer. I ordered Granger to follow the enemy with Wood’s division, but he was so much excited, and kept up such a roar of musketry in the direction the enemy had taken, that by the time I could stop the firing the enemy had got well out of the way. The enemy confronting Sherman, now seeing everything to their left giving way, fled also. Sherman, however, was not aware of the extent of our success until after nightfall, when he received orders to pursue at daylight in the morning.

As soon as Sherman discovered that the enemy had left his front he directed his reserves, Davis’s division of the Army of the Cumberland, to push over the pontoon-bridge at the mouth of the Chickamauga, and to move forward to Chickamauga station. He ordered Howard to move up the stream some two miles to where there was an old bridge, repair it during the night, and follow Davis at four o’clock in the morning. Morgan L. Smith was ordered to reconnoiter the tunnel to see if that was still held. Nothing was found there but dead bodies of men of both armies. The rest of Sherman’s command was directed to follow Howard at daylight in the morning to get on to the railroad toward Graysville.

Hooker, as stated, was detained at Chattanooga Creek by the destruction of the bridge at that point.
He got his troops over, with the exception of the artillery, by fording the stream at a little after three o'clock. Leaving his artillery to follow when the bridge should be reconstructed, he pushed on with the remainder of his command. At Rossville he came upon the flank of a division of the enemy, which soon commenced a retreat along the ridge. This threw them on Palmer. They could make but little resistance in the position they were caught in, and as many of them as could do so escaped. Many, however, were captured. Hooker's position during the night of the 25th was near Rossville, extending east of the ridge. Palmer was on his left, on the road to Graysville.

During the night I telegraphed to Willcox that Bragg had been defeated, and that immediate relief would be sent to Burnside if he could hold out; to Halleck I sent an announcement of our victory, and informed him that forces would be sent up the valley to relieve Burnside.

Before the battle of Chattanooga opened I had taken measures for the relief of Burnside the moment the way should be clear. Thomas was directed to have the little steamer that had been built at Chattanooga loaded to its capacity with rations and ammunition. Granger's corps was to move by the south bank of the Tennessee River to the mouth of the Holston, and up that to Knoxville, accompanied by the boat. In addition to the supplies transported by boat the men were to carry forty rounds of ammunition in their cartridge-boxes, and four days' rations in haversacks.

In the battle of Chattanooga troops from the Army of the Potomac, from the Army of the Tennessee, and from the Army of the Cumberland participated. In fact, the accidents growing out of the heavy rains and the sudden rise in the Tennessee River so mingled the troops that the organizations were not kept together, under their respective commanders, during the battle. Hooker, on the right, had Geary’s division of the Twelfth Corps, Army of the Potomac; Osterhaus’s division of the Fifteenth Corps, Army of the Tennessee; and Cruft’s division of the Army of the Cumberland. Sherman had three divisions of his own army, Howard’s corps from the Army of the Potomac, and Jefferson C. Davis’s division of the Army of the Cumberland. There was no jealousy—hardly rivalry. Indeed, I doubt whether officers or men took any note at the time of the fact of this intermingling of commands. All saw a defiant foe surrounding them, and took it for granted that every move was intended to dislodge him, and it made no difference where the troops came from so that the end was accomplished.

The victory at Chattanooga was won against great odds, considering the advantage the enemy had of position, and was accomplished more easily than was expected, by reason of Bragg’s making several grave mistakes: first, in sending away his ablest corps commander with over twenty thousand troops; second, in sending away a division of troops on the eve of battle; third, in placing so much of a force on the plain in front of his impregnable position.

It was known that Mr. Jefferson Davis had visited Bragg on Missionary Ridge a short time before my reaching Chattanooga. It was reported and believed that he had come out to reconcile a serious difference between Bragg and Longstreet, and finding this difficult to do, planned the campaign against Knoxville, to be conducted by the latter general. I had known both Bragg and Longstreet before the war, the latter very well. We had been three years at West Point together, and, after my graduation, for a time in the same regiment. Then we served together in the Mexican war. I had known Bragg in Mexico, and met him occasionally subsequently. I could well understand how there might be an irreconcilable difference between them.

Bragg was a remarkably intelligent and well-informed man, professionally and otherwise. He was also thoroughly upright. But he was possessed of an irascible temper, and was naturally disputatious. A man of the highest moral character and the most correct habits, yet in the old army he was in frequent trouble. As a subordinate he was always on the lookout to catch his commanding officer infringing his prerogatives; as a post commander he was equally vigilant to detect the slightest neglect, even of the most trivial order.

I have heard in the old army an anecdote very characteristic of Bragg. On one occasion, when stationed at a post of several companies commanded by a field-officer, he was himself commanding one of the companies and at the same time acting as post quartermaster and commissary. He was first lieutenant at the time, but his captain was detached on other duty. As commander of the company he made a requisition upon the quartermaster—himself—for something he wanted. As quartermaster he declined to fill the requisition, and indorsed on the back of it his reasons for so doing. As company commander he responded to this, urging that his requisition called for nothing but what he was entitled to, and that it was the duty of the quartermaster to fill it. As quartermaster he still persisted that he was right. In this condition of affairs Bragg referred the whole matter to the commanding officer of the post. The latter, when he saw the nature of the matter referred, exclaimed, "My God, Mr. Bragg, you have quarreled with every officer in the army, and now you are quarreling with yourself!"

Longstreet was an entirely different man. He was brave, honest, intelligent, a very capable soldier, subordinate to his superiors, just and kind to his subordinates, but jealous of his own rights, which he had the courage to maintain. He was never on the lookout to detect a slight, but saw one as soon as anybody when intentionally given.

It may be that Longstreet was not sent to Knoxville for the reason stated, but because Mr. Davis had an exalted opinion of his own military genius, and thought he saw a chance of "killing two birds with one stone." On several occasions during the war he came to the relief of the Union army by means of his superior military genius.

I speak advisedly when I say Mr. Davis prided himself on his military capacity. He says so himself, virtually, in his answer to the notice of his nomination to the Confederate Presidency. Some of his generals have said so in their writings since the downfall of the Confederacy.

My recollection is that my first orders for the battle of Chattanooga were as fought. Sherman was to get on Missionary Ridge, as he did; Hooker to cross the north end of Lookout Mountain, as he did, sweep across Chattanooga Valley, and get across the south end of the ridge near Rossville. When Hooker had secured that position the Army of the Cumberland was to assault in the center. Before Sherman arrived, however, the order was so changed as that Hooker was directed to come to Chattanooga by the north bank of the Tennessee River. The waters in the river, owing to heavy rains, rose so fast that the bridge at Brown's ferry could not be maintained in a condition to be used in crossing troops upon it. For this reason Hooker's orders were changed by telegraph back to what they were originally.

Note.—From this point on this volume was written (with the exception of the campaign in the Wilderness, which had been previously written) by General Grant after his great illness in April, and the present arrangement of the subject-matter was made by him between the 10th and 18th of July, 1885.—F. D. G.
CHAPTER III

THE RELIEF OF KNOXVILLE—HEADQUARTERS MOVED TO NASHVILLE—VISITING KNOXVILLE—CIPHER DESPATCHES—WITHHOLDING ORDERS

CHATTANOOGA now being secure to the National troops beyond any doubt, I immediately turned my attention to relieving Knoxville, about the situation of which the President, in particular, was very anxious. Prior to the battles I had made preparations for sending troops to the relief of Burnside at the very earliest moment after securing Chattanooga. We had there two little steamers which had been built and fitted up from the remains of old boats and put in condition to run. General Thomas was directed to have one of these boats loaded with rations and ammunition, and move up the Tennessee River to the mouth of the Holston, keeping the boat all the time abreast of the troops. General Granger, with the Fourth Corps reinforced to make twenty thousand men, was to start the moment Missionary Ridge was carried, and under no circumstances were the troops to return to their old camps. With the provisions carried, and the little that could be got in the country, it was supposed he could hold out until Longstreet was driven away, after which event East Tennessee would furnish abundance of food for Burnside's army and his own also.

While following the enemy on the 26th, and again on the morning of the 27th, part of the time by the road to Ringgold, I directed Thomas, verbally, not to start Granger until he received further orders from me; advising him that I was going to the front to more fully see the situation. I was not right sure but that Bragg's troops might be over their stampede by the time they reached Dalton. In that case Bragg might think it well to take the road back to Cleveland, move thence toward Knoxville, and, uniting with Longstreet, make a sudden dash upon Burnside.

When I arrived at Ringgold, however, on the 27th, I saw that the retreat was most earnest. The enemy had been throwing away guns, caissons, and small arms, abandoning provisions, and, altogether, seemed to be moving like a disorganized mob, with the exception of Cleburne's division, which was acting as rear-guard to cover the retreat.

When Hooker moved from Rossville toward Ringgold, Palmer's division took the road to Graysville, and Sherman moved by the way of Chickamauga station toward the same point. As soon as I saw the situation at Ringgold I sent a staff-officer back to Chattanooga to advise Thomas of the condition of affairs, and direct him by my orders to start Granger at once. Feeling now that the troops were already on the march for the relief of Burnside, I was in no hurry to get back, but stayed at Ringgold through the day to prepare for the return of our troops.

Ringgold is in a valley in the mountains, situated between East Chickamauga Creek and Taylor's Ridge, and about twenty miles southeast from Chattanooga. I arrived just as the artillery that Hooker had left behind at Chattanooga Creek got up. His men were attacking Cleburne's division, which had taken a strong position in the adjacent hills, so as to cover the retreat of the Confederate army through a narrow gorge which presents itself at that point. Just beyond the gorge the valley is narrow, and the creek so tortuous that it has to be crossed a great many times in the course of the first mile. This attack was unfortunate, and cost us some men unnecessarily. Hooker captured, however, 3 pieces of artillery and 230 prisoners, and 130 rebel dead were left upon the field.

I directed General Hooker to collect the flour and wheat in the neighboring mills for the use of the troops, and then to destroy the mills and all other property that could be of use to the enemy, but not to make any wanton destruction.

At this point Sherman came up, having reached Graysville with his troops, where he found Palmer had preceded him. Palmer had picked up many prisoners and much abandoned property on the route. I went back in the evening to Graysville with Sherman, remained there overnight, and did not return to Chattanooga until the following night, the 29th. I then found that Thomas had not yet started Granger, thus having lost a full day, which I deemed of so much importance in determining the fate of Knoxville. Thomas and Granger were aware that on the 23d of the month Burnside had telegraphed that his supplies would last for ten or twelve days, and during that time he could hold out against Longstreet, but if not relieved within the time indicated he would be obliged to surrender or attempt to retreat. To effect a retreat would have been an impossibility. He was already very low in ammunition, and with an army pursuing he would not have been able to gather supplies.

Finding that Granger had not only not started, but was very reluctant to go, he having decided for himself that it was a very bad move to make, I sent word to General Sherman of the situation, and directed him to march to the relief of Knoxville. I also gave him the problem that we had to solve—that Burnside had now but four to six days' supplies left, and that he must be relieved within that time.

Sherman, fortunately, had not started on his return from Graysville, having sent out detachments on the railroad which runs from Dalton to Cleveland and Knoxville to thoroughly destroy that road, and these troops had not yet returned to camp. I was very loath to send Sherman, because his men needed rest after their long march from Memphis and hard fighting at Chattanooga. But I had become satisfied that Burnside would not be rescued if his relief depended upon General Granger's movements.

Sherman had left his camp on the north side of the Tennessee River, near Chattanooga, on the night of the 23d, the men having two days' cooked rations in their haversacks. Expecting to be back in their tents by that time, and to be engaged in battle while out, they took with them neither overcoats nor blankets. The weather was already cold, and at night they must have suffered more or less.
The two days' rations had already lasted them five days; and they were now to go through a country which had been run over so much by Confederate troops that there was but little probability of finding much food. They did, however, succeed in capturing some flour. They also found a good deal of bran in some of the mills, which the men made up into bread; and in this and other ways they eked out an existence until they could reach Knoxville.

I was so very anxious that Burnside should get news of the steps being taken for his relief, and thus induce him to hold out a little longer if it became necessary, that I determined to send a message to him. I therefore sent a member of my staff, Colonel J. H. Wilson, to get into Knoxville if he could, report to Burnside the situation fully, and give him all the encouragement possible. Mr. Charles A. Dana was at Chattanooga during the battle, and had been there even before I assumed command. Mr. Dana volunteered to accompany Colonel Wilson, and did accompany him. I put the information of what was being done for the relief of Knoxville into writing, and directed that in some way or other it must be secretly managed so as to have a copy of this fall into the hands of General Longstreet. They made the trip safely; General Longstreet did learn of Sherman's coming in advance of his reaching there, and Burnside was prepared to hold out even for a longer time if it had been necessary.

Burnside had stretched a boom across the Holston River to catch seows and flats as they floated down. On these, by previous arrangements with the loyal people of East Tennessee, were placed flour and corn, with forage and provisions generally, and were thus secured for the use of the Union troops. They also drove cattle into Knoxville by the east side, which was not covered by the enemy; so that when relief arrived Burnside had more provisions on hand than when he had last reported.

Our total loss (not including Burnside's) in all these engagements amounted to 757 killed, 4529 wounded, and 330 missing. We captured 6142 prisoners—about fifty per cent. more than the enemy reported for their total loss—40 pieces of artillery, 69 artillery carriages and caissons, and over 7000 stands of small arms. The enemy's loss in arms was probably much greater than here reported, because we picked up a great many that were found abandoned.

I had at Chattanooga, in round numbers, about sixty thousand men. Bragg had about half this number, but his position was supposed to be impregnable. It was his own fault that he did not have more men present. He had sent Longstreet away with his corps swelled by reinforcements up to over twenty thousand men, thus reducing his own force more than one third, and depriving himself of the presence of the ablest general of his command. He did this, too, after our troops had opened a line of communication by way of Brown's and Kelly's ferries with Bridgeport, thus securing full rations and supplies of every kind; and also when he knew reinforcements were coming to me. Knoxville was of no earthly use to him while Chattanooga was in our hands. If he should capture Chattanooga, Knoxville with its garrison would have fallen into his hands without a struggle. I have never been able to see the wisdom of this move.

Then, too, after Sherman had arrived, and when Bragg knew that he was on the north side of the Tennessee River, he sent Buckner's division to reinforce Longstreet. He also started another division a day later; but our attack having commenced before it reached Knoxville, Bragg ordered it back. It had got so far, however, that it could not return to Chattanooga in time to be of service there. It is possible this latter blunder may have been made by Bragg having become confused as to what was going on on our side. Sherman had, as already stated, crossed to the north side of the Tennessee River at Brown's ferry, in full view of Bragg's troops from Lookout Mountain, a few days before the attack. They then disappeared behind foothills, and did not come to the view of the troops on Missionary Ridge until they met their assault. Bragg knew it was Sherman's troops that had crossed, and, they being so long out of view, may have supposed that they had gone up the north bank of the Tennessee River to the relief of Knoxville, and that Longstreet was therefore in danger. But the first great blunder, detaching Longstreet, cannot be accounted for in any way I know of. If he had captured Chattanooga, East Tennessee would have fallen without a struggle. It would have been a victory for us to have got our army away from Chattanooga safely. It was a manifold greater victory to drive away the besieging army; a still greater one to defeat that army in his chosen ground and nearly annihilate it.
The probabilities are that our loss in killed was the heavier, as we were the attacking party. The enemy reported his loss in killed at 361; but as he reported his missing at 4146, while we held over 6000 of them as prisoners, and there must have been hundreds, if not thousands, who deserted, but little reliance can be placed on this report. There was certainly great dissatisfaction with Bragg on the part of the soldiers for his harsh treatment of them, and a disposition to get away if they could. Then, too, Chattanooga following in the same half-year with Gettysburg in the East and Vicksburg in the West, there was much the same feeling in the South at this time that there had been in the North the fall and winter before. If the same license had been allowed the people and press in the South that was allowed in the North, Chattanooga would probably have been the last battle fought for the preservation of the Union.

General William F. Smith's services in these battles had been such that I thought him eminently entitled to promotion. I was aware that he had previously been named by the President for promotion to the grade of major-general, but that the Senate had rejected the nomination. I was not aware of the reasons for this course, and therefore strongly recommended him for a major-generalcy. My recommendation was heeded and the appointment made.

Upon the raising of the siege of Knoxville, I, of course, informed the authorities at Washington—the President and Secretary of War—of the fact, which caused great rejoicing there. The President especially was rejoiced that Knoxville had been relieved without further bloodshed. The safety of Burnside's army and the loyal people of East Tennessee had been the subject of much anxiety to the President for several months during which time he was doing all he could to relieve the situation—sending a new commander with a few thousand troops by the way of Cumberland Gap, and telegraphing me daily, almost hourly, to "remember Burnside," "do something for Burnside," and other appeals of like tenor. He saw no escape for East Tennessee until after our victory at Chattanooga. Even then he was afraid that Burnside might be out of ammunition, in a starving condition, or overpowered; and his anxiety was still intense until he heard that Longstreet had been driven from the field.

Burnside followed Longstreet only to Strawberry Plains, some twenty miles or more east, and then stopped, believing that Longstreet would leave the State. The latter did not do so, however, but stopped only a short distance farther on, and subsisted his army for the entire winter off East Tennessee. Foster now relieved Burnside. Sherman made disposition of his troops along the Tennessee River in accordance with instructions. I left Thomas in command at Chattanooga, and, about the 20th of December, moved my headquarters to Nashville, Tennessee.

—my profoundest gratitude—for the skill, courage, and perseverance with which you and they, over so great difficulties, have effected that important object. God bless you all.

A. Lincoln,
President U. S.
Nashville was the most central point from which to communicate with my entire military division, and also with the authorities at Washington. While remaining at Chattanooga I was liable to have my telegraphic communications cut so as to throw me out of communication with both my command and Washington.

Nothing occurred at Nashville worthy of mention during the winter;¹ so I set myself to the task of having troops in positions from which they could move to advantage, and in collecting all necessary supplies, so as to be ready to claim a due share of the enemy’s attention upon the appearance of the first good weather in the spring. I expected to retain the command I then had, and prepared myself for the campaign against Atlanta. I also had great hopes of having a campaign made against Mobile from the Gulf. I expected after Atlanta fell to occupy that place permanently, and to cut off Lee’s army from the West by way of the road running through Augusta to Atlanta and thence southwest. I was preparing to hold Atlanta with a small garrison, and it was my expectation to push through to Mobile if that city was in our possession; if not, to Savannah; and in this manner to get possession of the only east-and-west railroad that would then be left to the enemy. But the spring campaign against Mobile was not made.

¹ During this winter the citizens of Jo Daviess County, Illinois, subscribed for and had a diamond-hilted sword made for General Grant, which was always known as the Chattanooga sword. The scabbard was of gold, and was ornamented with a scroll running nearly its entire length, displaying in engraved letters the names of the battles in which General Grant had participated. Congress also gave him a vote of thanks for the victories at Chattanooga, and voted him a gold medal for Vicksburg and Chattanooga. All such things are now in the possession of the government at Washington. —F. D. G.

The Army of the Ohio had been getting supplies over Cumberland Gap until their animals had nearly all starved. I now determined to go myself to see if there was any possible chance of using that route in the spring, and if not, to abandon it. Accordingly I left Nashville in the latter part of December by rail for Chattanooga. From Chattanooga I took one of the little steamers previously spoken of as having been built there, and, putting my horses aboard, went up to the junction of the Clinch with the Tennessee. From that point the railroad had been repaired up to Knoxville and out east to Strawberry Plains. I went by rail, therefore, to Knoxville, where I remained for several days. General John G. Foster was then commanding the Department of the Ohio. It was an intensely cold winter, the thermometer being down as low as zero every morning for more than a week while I was at Knoxville and on my way from there on horseback to Lexington, Kentucky, the first point where I could reach rail to carry me back to my headquarters at Nashville.

The road over Cumberland Gap, and back of it, was strewn with débris of broken wagons and dead animals, much as I had found it on my first trip to Chattanooga over Waldron’s Ridge. The road had been cut up to as great a depth as clay could be by mules and wagons, and in that condition frozen; so that the ride of six days from Strawberry Plains to Lexington over these holes and knobs in the road was a very cheerless one and very disagreeable.

I found a great many people at home along that route, both in Tennessee and Kentucky, and, almost universally, intensely loyal. They would collect in little places where we would stop of evenings to see me, generally hearing of my approach before we arrived. The people naturally expected to see the commanding general the oldest person in the party. I was then forty-one years of age, while my medical director was gray-haired and probably twelve or more years my senior. The crowds would generally swarm around him, and thus give me an opportunity of quietly dismounting and getting into the house. It also gave me an opportunity of hearing passing remarks from one spectator to another about their general. Those remarks were apt to be more complimentary to the cause than to the appearance of the supposed general, owing to his being muffled up, and also owing to the travel-worn condition we were all in after a hard day's ride. I was back in Nashville by the 13th of January, 1864.

When I started on this trip it was necessary for me to have some person along who could turn despatches into cipher, and who could also read the cipher despatches which I was liable to receive daily and almost hourly. Under the rules of the War Department at that time, Mr. Stanton had taken entire control of the matter of regulating the telegraph and determining how it should be used, and of saying who, and who alone, should have the ciphers. The operators possessed of the ciphers, as well as the ciphers used, were practically independent of the commanders whom they were serving immediately under, and had to report to the War Department through General Stager all the despatches which they received or forwarded.
I was obliged to leave the telegraphic operator back at Nashville, because that was the point at which all despatches to me would come, to be forwarded from there. As I have said, it was necessary for me also to have an operator during this inspection who had possession of this cipher, to enable me to telegraph to my division and to the War Department without my despatches being read by all the operators along the line of wires over which they were transmitted. Accordingly I ordered the cipher operator to turn over the key to Captain Cyrus B. Comstock, of the Corps of Engineers, whom I had selected as a wise and discreet man who certainly could be trusted with the cipher if the operator at my headquarters could.

The operator refused point-blank to turn over the key to Captain Comstock as directed by me, stating that his orders from the War Department were not to give it to anybody—the commanding general or any one else. I told him I would see whether he would or not. He said that if he did he would be punished. I told him if he did not he most certainly would be punished. Finally, seeing that punishment was certain if he refused longer to obey my order, and being somewhat remote (even if he was not protected altogether from the consequences of his disobedience to his orders) from the War Department, he yielded. When I returned from Knoxville I found quite a commotion. The operator had been reprimanded very severely and ordered to be relieved. I informed the Secretary of War, or his assistant secretary in charge of the telegraph, Stager, that the man could not be relieved, for he had only obeyed my orders. It was absolutely necessary for me to have the cipher, and the man would most certainly have been punished if he had not delivered it; that they would have to punish me if they punished anybody, or words to that effect.

This was about the only thing approaching a disagreeable difference between the Secretary of War and myself that occurred until the war was over, when we had another little spat. Owing to his natural disposition to assume all power and control in all matters that he had anything whatever to do with, he boldly took command of the armies, and, while issuing no orders on the subject, prohibited any order from me going out of the adjutant-general's office until he had approved it. This was done by directing the adjutant-general to hold any orders that came from me to be issued from the adjutant-general's office until he had examined them and given his approval. He never disturbed himself, either, in examining my orders until it was entirely convenient for him; so that orders which I had prepared would often lie there three or four days before he would sanction them. I remonstrated against this in writing, and the Secretary apologetically restored me to my rightful position of General-in-chief of the Army. But he soon lapsed again and took control much as before.

After the relief of Knoxville, Sherman had proposed to Burnside that he should go with him to drive Longstreet out of Tennessee; but Burnside assured him that with the troops which had been brought by Granger, and which were to be left, he would be amply prepared to dispose of Longstreet without availing himself of this offer. As before stated, Sherman's command had left their camps north of the Tennessee, near Chattanooga, with two days' rations in their haversacks, without coats or blankets, and without many wagons, expecting to return to their camps by the end of that time. The weather was now cold and they were suffering, but still they were ready to make the further sacrifice, had it been required, for the good of the cause which had brought them into service. Sherman, having accomplished the object for which he was sent, marched back leisurely to his old camp on the Tennessee River.
CHAPTER IV

OPERATIONS IN MISSISSIPPI—LONGSTREET IN EAST TENNESSEE—COMMISSIONED LIEUTENANT-GENERAL—COMMANDING THE ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES—FIRST INTERVIEW WITH PRESIDENT LINCOLN

SOON after his return from Knoxville I ordered Sherman to distribute his forces from Stevenson to Decatur and thence north to Nashville. Sherman suggested that he be permitted to go back to Mississippi, to the limits of his own department and where most of his army still remained, for the purpose of clearing out what Confederates might still be left on the east bank of the Mississippi River to impede its navigation by our boats. He expected also to have the coöperation of Banks to do the same thing on the west shore. Of course I approved heartily.

About the 10th of January Sherman was back in Memphis, where Hurlbut commanded, and got together his Memphis men, or ordered them collected and sent to Vicksburg. He then went to Vicksburg and out to where McPherson was in command, and had him organize his surplus troops so as to give him about twenty thousand men in all.

Sherman knew that General (Bishop) Polk was occupying Meridian with his headquarters, and had two divisions of infantry with a considerable force of cavalry scattered west of him. He determined, therefore, to move directly upon Meridian.

I had sent some twenty-five hundred cavalry under General Sooy Smith to Sherman's department, and they had mostly arrived before Sherman got to Memphis. Hurlbut had seven thousand cavalry, and Sherman ordered him to reinforce Smith so as to give the latter a force of about seven thousand with which to go against Forrest, who was then known to be southeast from Memphis. Smith was ordered to move about the 1st of February.

While Sherman was waiting at Vicksburg for the arrival of Hurlbut with his surplus men, he sent out scouts to ascertain the position and strength of the enemy and to bring back all the information they could gather. When these scouts returned it was through them that he got the information of General Polk's being at Meridian, and of the strength and disposition of his command.

Forrest had about four thousand cavalry with him, composed of thoroughly well-disciplined men, who under so able a leader were very effective. Smith's command was nearly double that of Forrest, but not equal, man to man, for the lack of a successful experience such as Forrest's men had had. The fact is, troops who have fought a few battles and won, and followed up their victories, improve upon what they were before to an extent that can hardly be counted by percentage. The difference in result is often decisive victory instead of inglorious defeat. This same difference, too, is often due to the way troops are officered, and for the particular kind of warfare which Forrest had carried on neither army could present a more effective officer than he was.

Sherman got off on the 3d of February and moved out on his expedition, meeting with no opposition whatever until he crossed the Big Black, and with no great deal of opposition after that until he reached Jackson, Mississippi. This latter place he reached on the 6th or 7th, Brandon on the 8th, and Morton on the 9th. Up to this time he moved in two columns to enable him to get a good supply of forage, etc., and expedite the march. Here, however, there were indications of the concentration of Confederate infantry, and he was obliged to keep his army close together. He had no serious engagement; but he met some of the enemy, who destroyed a few of his wagons, about Decatur, Mississippi, where, by the way, Sherman himself came near being picked up.

He entered Meridian on the 14th of the month, the enemy having retreated toward Demopolis, Alabama. He spent several days in Meridian in thoroughly destroying the railroad to the north and south, and also for the purpose of hearing from Sooy Smith, who, he supposed, had met Forrest before this time, and, he hoped, had gained a decisive victory because of a superiority of numbers. Hearing nothing of him, however, he started on his return trip to Vicksburg. There he learned that Smith, while waiting for a few of his men who had been ice-bound in the Ohio River, instead of getting off on the 1st as expected, had not left until the 11th. Smith did meet Forrest, but the result was decidedly in Forrest's favor.
Sherman had written a letter to Banks, proposing a coöperative movement with him against Shreveport, subject to my approval. I disapproved of Sherman's going himself, because I had other important work for him to do, but consented that he might send a few troops to the aid of Banks, though their time to remain absent must be limited. We must have them for the spring campaign. The trans-Mississippi movement proved abortive.

My eldest son, who had accompanied me on the Vicksburg campaign and siege, had while there contracted disease, which grew worse, until he had grown so dangerously ill that on the 24th of January I obtained permission to go to St. Louis, where he was staying at the time, to see him, hardly expecting to find him alive on my arrival. While I was permitted to go, I was not permitted to turn over my command to any one else, but was directed to keep the headquarters with me and to communicate regularly with all parts of my division and with Washington, just as though I had remained at Nashville.

When I obtained this leave I was at Chattanooga, having gone there again to make preparations to have the troops of Thomas in the southern part of Tennessee coöperate with Sherman's movement in Mississippi. I directed Thomas and Logan, who was at Scottsborough, Alabama, to keep up a threatening movement to the south against J. E. Johnston, who had again relieved Bragg, for the purpose of making him keep as many troops as possible there.

I learned through Confederate sources that Johnston had already sent two divisions in the direction of Mobile, presumably to operate against Sherman, and two more divisions to Longstreet in East Tennessee. Seeing that Johnston had depleted in this way, I directed Thomas to send at least ten thousand men, besides Stanley's division, which was already to the east, into East Tennessee, and notified Schofield, who was now in command in East Tennessee, of this movement of troops into his department, and also of the reinforcements Longstreet had received. My object was to drive Longstreet out of East Tennessee as a part of the preparations for my spring campaign.

About this time General Foster, who had been in command of the Department of the Ohio after Burnside until Schofield relieved him, advised me that he thought it would be a good thing to keep Longstreet just where he was; that he was perfectly quiet in East Tennessee, and if he was forced to leave there, his whole well-equipped army would be free to go to any place where it could effect the most for their cause. I thought the advice was good, and, adopting that view, countermanded the orders for pursuit of Longstreet.

On the 12th of February I ordered Thomas to take Dalton and hold it, if possible; and I directed him to move without delay. Finding that he had not moved, on the 17th I urged him again to start, telling him how important it was, that the object of the movement was to coöperate with Sherman, 1 Washington, D. C., December 29, 1863.

Maj.-General U. S. Grant:

General Foster has asked to be relieved from his command on account of disability from old wounds. Should his request be granted, who would you like as his successor? It is possible that Schofield will be sent to your command.

H. W. Halleck,
General-in-Chief.

[Official.]
who was moving eastward and might be in danger. Then again on the 21st, he not yet having started, I asked him if he could not start the next day. He finally got off on the 22d or 23d. The enemy fell back from his front without a battle, but took a new position quite as strong and farther to the rear. Thomas reported that he could not go any farther, because it was impossible with his poor teams, nearly starved, to keep up supplies until the railroads were repaired. He soon fell back.

Schofield also had to return for the same reason. He could not carry supplies with him, and Longstreet was between him and the supplies still left in the country. Longstreet, in his retreat, would be moving toward his supplies, while our forces, following, would be receding from theirs. On the 2d of March, however, I learned of Sherman's success, which eased my mind very much. The next day, the 3d, I was ordered to Washington.

The bill restoring the grade of Lieutenant-General of the Army had passed through Congress and became a law on the 26th of February. My nomination had been sent to the Senate on the 1st of March and confirmed the next day (the 2d). I was ordered to Washington on the 3d to receive my commission, and started the day following that. The commission was handed to me on the 9th. It was delivered to me at the Executive Mansion by President Lincoln in the presence of his Cabinet, my eldest son, those of my staff who were with me, and a few other visitors.

The President in presenting my commission read from a paper—stating, however, as a preliminary, and prior to the delivery of it, that he had drawn that up on paper, knowing my disinclination to speak in public, and handed me a copy in advance so that I might prepare a few lines of reply. The President said:

"General Grant, the nation's appreciation of what you have done, and its reliance upon you for what remains to be done, in the existing great struggle, are now presented, with this commission constituting you Lieutenant-General in the Army of the United States. With this high honor devolves upon you, also, a corresponding responsibility. As the country herein trusts you, so, under God, it will sustain you. I scarcely need to add that, with what I here speak for the nation, goes my own hearty personal concurrence."

To this I replied: "Mr. President, I accept the commission, with gratitude for the high honor conferred. With the aid of the noble armies that have fought in so many fields for our common country, it will be my earnest endeavor not to disappoint your expectations. I feel the full weight of the responsibilities now devolving on me; and I know that if they are met, it will be due to those armies, and, above all, to the favor of that Providence which leads both nations and men."

On the 10th I visited the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac at Brandy station; then returned to Washington, and pushed west at once to make my arrangements for turning over the commands there and giving general directions for the preparations to be made for the spring campaign.

It had been my intention before this to remain in the West, even if I was made lieutenant-general; but when I got to Washington and saw the situation it was plain that here was the point for the commanding general to be. No one else could, probably, resist the pressure that would be brought to bear upon him to desist from his own plans and pursue others. I determined, therefore, before I started back, to have Sherman advanced to my late position, McPherson to Sherman's in command of the department, and Logan to the command of McPherson's corps. These changes were all made on my recommendation and without hesitation. My commission as lieutenant-general was given to me on the 9th of March, 1864. On the following day, as already stated, I visited General Meade, commanding the Army of the Potomac, at his headquarters at Brandy station, north of the Rapidan. I had known General Meade slightly in the Mexican war, but had not met him since until this visit. I was a stranger to most of the Army of the Potomac, I might say to all except the officers of the regular army who had served in the Mexican war. There had been some changes ordered in the organization of that army before my promotion. One was the consolidation of five corps into three, thus throwing some officers of rank out of important commands. Meade evidently thought that I might want to make still one more change not yet ordered. He said to me that I might want an officer who had served with me in the West, mentioning Sherman specially, to take his place. If so, he begged me not to hesitate about making the change. He urged that the work before us was of such vast importance to the whole nation that the feeling or wishes of no one person should stand in the way of selecting the right men for all positions.
For himself, he would serve to the best of his ability wherever placed. I assured him that I had no thought of substituting any one for him. As to Sherman, he could not be spared from the West.

This incident gave me even a more favorable opinion of Meade than did his great victory at Gettysburg the July before. It is men who wait to be selected, and not those who seek, from whom we may always expect the most efficient service.

Meade's position afterward proved embarrassing to me, if not to him. He was commanding an army, and, for nearly a year previous to my taking command of all the armies, was in supreme command of the Army of the Potomac—except from the authorities at Washington. All other general officers occupying similar positions were independent in their commands so far as any one present with them was concerned. I tried to make General Meade's position as nearly as possible what it would have been if I had been in Washington or any other place away from his command. I therefore gave all orders for the movements of the Army of the Potomac to Meade to have them executed. To avoid the necessity of having to give orders direct, I established my headquarters near his, unless there were reasons for locating them elsewhere. This sometimes happened, and I had on occasions to give orders direct to the troops affected. On the 11th I returned to Washington, and on the day after orders were published by the War Department placing me in command of all the armies. I had left Washington the night before to return to my old command in the West and to meet Sherman, whom I had telegraphed to join me in Nashville.
Sherman assumed command of the Military Division of the Mississippi on the 18th of March, and we left Nashville together for Cincinnati. I had Sherman accompany me that far on my way back to Washington so that we could talk over the matters about which I wanted to see him without losing any more time from my new command than was necessary. The first point which I wished to discuss was particularly about the cooperation of his command with mine when the spring campaign should commence. There were also other and minor points, minor as compared with the great importance of the question to be decided by sanguinary war—the restoration to duty of officers who had been relieved from important commands, namely, McClellan, Burnside, and Fremont in the East, and Buell, McCook, Negley, and Crittenden in the West.

Some time in the winter of 1863–64 I had been invited by the general-in-chief to give my views of the campaign I thought advisable for the command under me—now Sherman’s. General J. E. Johnston was defending Atlanta and the interior of Georgia with an army, the largest part of which was stationed at Dalton, about thirty-eight miles south of Chattanooga. Dalton is at the junction of the railroad from Cleveland with the one from Chattanooga to Atlanta.

There could have been no difference of opinion as to the first duty of the armies of the Military Division of the Mississippi. Johnston’s army was the first objective, and that important railroad center, Atlanta, the second. At the time I wrote General Halleck giving my views of the approaching cam-campaign, and at the time I met General Sherman, it was expected that General Banks would be through with the campaign which he had been ordered upon before my appointment to the command of all the armies, and would be ready to coöperate with the armies east of the Mississippi, his part in the programme being to move upon Mobile by land while the navy would close the harbor and assist to the best of its ability.¹ The plan, therefore, was for Sherman to attack Johnston and destroy his army if possible, to capture Atlanta and hold it, and with his troops and those of Banks to hold a line through to Mobile, or at least to hold Atlanta and command the railroad running east and west, and the troops from one or other of the armies to hold important points on the southern road, the only east-and-west road that would be left in the possession of the enemy. This would cut the Confederacy in two again, as our gaining possession of the Mississippi River had done before. Banks was not ready in time for the part assigned to him, and circumstances that could not be foreseen determined the campaign which was afterward made, the success and grandeur of which has resounded throughout all lands.

In regard to restoring officers who had been relieved from important commands to duty again, I left Sherman to look after those who had been removed in the West while I looked out for the rest. I directed, however, that he should make no assignment until I could speak to the Secretary of War about the matter. I shortly after recommended to the Secretary the assignment of General Buell to duty. I received the assurance that duty would be offered to him; and afterward the Secretary told me that he had offered Buell an assignment and that the latter had declined it, saying that it would be degradation to accept the assignment offered. I understood afterward that he refused to serve under either Sherman or Canby because he had ranked them both. Both graduated before him and ranked him in the old army. Sherman ranked him as a brigadier-general. All of them ranked me in the old army, and Sherman and Buell did as brigadiers. The worst excuse a soldier can make for declining service is that he once ranked the commander he is ordered to report to.

¹ See letter to Banks, in General Grant's report, Appendix, and in the Official Records as cited in the margin.—F. D. G.

On the 23d of March I was back in Washington, and on the 26th took up my headquarters at Culpeper Court House, a few miles south of the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac.

Although hailing from Illinois myself, the State of the President, I never met Mr. Lincoln until called to the capital to receive my commission as lieutenant-general. I knew him, however, very well and favorably from the accounts given by officers under me at the West who had known him all their lives. I had also read the remarkable series of debates between Lincoln and Douglas a few years before, when they were rival candidates for the United States Senate. I was then a resident of Missouri, and by no means a "Lincoln man" in that contest; but I recognized then his great ability.

In my first interview with Mr. Lincoln alone he stated to me that he had never professed to be a military man or to know how campaigns should be conducted, and never wanted to interfere in them; but that procrastination on the part of commanders, and the pressure from the people at the North and Congress, which was always with him, forced him into issuing his series of "Military Orders"—one, two, three, etc. He did not know but they were all wrong, and did know that some of them were. All he wanted or had ever wanted was some one who would take the responsibility and act, and call on him for all the assistance needed, pledging himself to use all the power of the government in rendering such assistance. Assuring him that I would do the best I could with the means at hand, and avoid as far as possible annoying him or the War Department, our first interview ended.

The Secretary of War I had met once before only, but felt that I knew him better.

While commanding in West Tennessee we had occasionally held conversations over the wires, at night, when they were not being otherwise used. He and General Halleck both cautioned me against giving the President my plans of campaign, saying that he was so kind-hearted, so averse to refusing anything asked of him, that some friend would be sure to get from him all he knew. I should have said that in our interview the President told me he did not want to know what I proposed to do. But he submitted a plan of campaign of his own which he wanted me to hear and then do as I pleased about. He brought out a map of Virginia on which he had evidently marked every position occupied by the Federal and Confederate armies up to that time. He pointed out on the map two streams which empty into the Potomac, and suggested that the President's strategy... army might be moved on boats and landed between the mouths of these streams. We would then have the Potomac to bring our supplies, and the tributaries would protect our flanks while we moved out. I listened respectfully, but did not suggest that the same streams would protect Lee’s flanks while he was shutting us up.

I did not communicate my plans to the President, nor did I to the Secretary of War or to General Halleck.

March the 26th my headquarters were, as stated, at Culpeper, and the work of preparing for an early campaign commenced.
CHAPTER V

THE MILITARY SITUATION—PLANS FOR THE CAMPAIGN—SHERIDAN ASSIGNED TO COMMAND OF THE CAVALRY—FLANK MOVEMENTS—FORREST AT FORT PILLOW—GENERAL BANKS'S EXPEDITION—COLONEL MOSBY—AN INCIDENT OF THE WILDERNESS CAMPAIGN

WHEN I assumed command of all the armies the situation was about this: The Mississippi River was guarded from St. Louis to its mouth. The line of the Arkansas was held, thus giving us all the Northwest north of that river. A few points in Louisiana not remote from the river were held by the Federal troops, as was also the mouth of the Rio Grande. East of the Mississippi we held substantially all north of the Memphis and Charleston railroad as far east as Chattanooga, thence along the line of the Tennessee and Holston rivers, taking in nearly all of the State of Tennessee. West Virginia was in our hands; and that part of old Virginia north of the Rapidan and east of the Blue Ridge we also held. On the sea-coast we had Fortress Monroe and Norfolk in Virginia; Plymouth, Washington, and New Berne in North Carolina; Beaufort, Folly and Morris islands, Hilton Head, Port Royal, and Fort Pulaski in South Carolina and Georgia; Fernandina, St. Augustine, Key West, and Pensacola in Florida. The balance of the Southern territory, an empire in extent, was still in the hands of the enemy.

Sherman, who had succeeded me in the command of the Military Division of the Mississippi, commanded all the troops in the territory west of the Alleghanies and north of Natchez, with a large movable force about Chattanooga. His command was subdivided into four departments, but the commanders all reported to Sherman and were subject to his orders. This arrangement, however, insured the better protection of all lines of communication through the acquired territory, for the reason that these different department commanders could act promptly in case of a sudden or unexpected raid within their respective jurisdictions without awaiting the orders of the division commander.

In the East the opposing forces stood in substantially the same relations toward each other as three years before, or when the war began; they were both between the Federal and Confederate capitals. It is true, footholds had been secured by us on the sea-coast, in Virginia and North Carolina; but, beyond that, no substantial advantage had been gained by either side. Battles had been fought of as great severity as had ever been known in war, over ground from the James River and Chickahominy, near Richmond, to Gettysburg and Chambersburg, in Pennsylvania, with indecisive results, sometimes favorable to the National army, sometimes to the Confederate army; but in every instance, I believe, claimed as victories for the South by the Southern press, if not by the Southern generals. The Northern press, as a whole, did not discourage these claims; a portion of it always magnified rebel success and belittled ours, while another portion, most sincerely earnest in their desire for the preservation of the Union and the overwhelming success of the Federal armies, would nevertheless generally express dissatisfaction with whatever victories were gained because they were not more complete.

That portion of the Army of the Potomac not engaged in guarding lines of communication was on the northern bank of the Rapidan. The Army of Northern Virginia, confronting it on the opposite bank of the same river, was strongly intrenched and commanded by the acknowledged ablest general in the Confederate army. The country back to the James River is cut up with many streams, generally narrow, deep, and difficult to cross except where bridged. The region is heavily timbered, and the roads narrow and very bad after the least rain. Such an enemy was not, of course, unprepared with adequate fortifications at convenient intervals all the way back to Richmond, so that when driven from one fortified position he would always have another farther to the rear to fall back into.

To provision an army, campaigning against so formidable a foe through such a country, from wagons alone seemed almost impossible. System and discipline were both essential to its accomplishment.

The Union armies were now divided into nineteen departments, though four of them in the West had been concentrated into a single military division. The Army of the Potomac was a separate command and had no territorial limits. There were thus seventeen distinct commanders. Before this time these various armies had acted separately and independently of one another, giving the enemy an opportunity often of depleting one command, not pressed, to reinforce another more actively engaged. I determined to stop this. To this end I regarded the Army of the Potomac as the center, and all west to Memphis along the line described as our position at the time, and north of it, the right wing; the Army of the James, under General Butler, as the left wing; and all the troops south as a force in rear of the enemy. Some of these latter were occupying positions from which they could not render service proportionate to their numerical strength. All such were depleted to the minimum necessary to hold their positions as a guard against blockade-runners; where they could not do this their positions were abandoned altogether. In this way ten thousand men were added to the Army of the James from South Carolina alone, with General Gillmore in command. It was not contemplated that General Gillmore should leave his department; but as most of his troops were taken, presumably for active service, he asked to accompany them and was permitted to do so. Officers and soldiers on furlough, of whom there were many thousands, were ordered to their proper commands; concentration was the order of the day, and to have it accomplished in time to advance at the earliest moment the roads would permit was the problem.

As a reinforcement to the Army of the Potomac, or to act in support of it, the Ninth Army-corps, over twenty thousand strong, under General Burnside, had been rendezvoused at Annapolis, Maryland. This was an admirable position for such a reinforcement. The corps could be brought at the last moment as a reinforcement to the Army of the Potomac, or it could be thrown on the sea-coast, south of Norfolk, in Virginia or North Carolina, to operate against Richmond from that direction. In fact, Burnside and the War Department both thought the Ninth Corps was intended for such an expedition up to the last moment.
(Engraved by T. Johnson from a photograph taken in 1864, owned by the Union League Club, New York City.)

My general plan now was to concentrate all the force possible against the Confederate armies in the field. There were but two such, as we have seen, east of the Mississippi River and facing north. The Army of Northern Virginia, General Robert E. Lee commanding, was on the south bank of the Rapidan, confronting the Army of the Potomac; the second, under General Joseph E. Johnston, was at Dalton, Georgia, opposed to Sherman, who was still at Chattanooga. Besides these main armies the Confederates had to guard the Shenandoah Valley, a great storehouse to feed their armies from, and their line of communications from Richmond to Tennessee. Forrest, a brave and intrepid cavalry general, was in the West with a large force, making a larger command necessary to hold what we had gained in Middle and West Tennessee. We could not abandon any territory north of the line held by the enemy, because it would lay the Northern States open to invasion. But as the Army of the Potomac was the principal garrison for the protection of Washington even while it was moving on Lee, so all the forces to the west, and the Army of the James, guarded their special trusts when advancing from them as well as when remaining at them. Better, indeed, for they forced the enemy to guard his own lines and resources at a greater distance from ours, and with a greater force. Little expeditions could not so well be sent out to destroy a bridge or tear up a few miles of railroad track, burn a storehouse, or inflict other little annoyances. Accordingly I arranged for a simultaneous movement all along the line. Sherman was to move from Chattanooga, Johnston’s army and Atlanta being his objective points.\(^1\) Crook, commanding in West Virginia, was

---

\(^1\) [Private and Confidential.]

HEADQUARTERS, ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,

WASHINGTON, D. C.,

April 4, 1864.

MAJ.-GEN. W. T. SHERMAN,

Commanding Military Division of the Mississippi.

GENERAL: It is my design, if the enemy keep quiet and allow me to take the initiative in the spring campaign, to work all parts of the army together, and somewhat toward a common center. For your information I now write you my programme, as at present determined upon.

I have sent orders to Banks, by private messenger, to finish up his present expedition against Shreveport with all despatch; to turn over the defense of Red River to General Steele and the navy, and to return your troops to you and his own to New Orleans; to abandon all of Texas, except the Rio Grande, and to hold that with not to exceed four thousand men; to reduce the number of troops on the Mississippi to the lowest number necessary to hold it; and to collect from his command not less than twenty-five thousand men.

To this I will add five thousand men from Missouri. With this force he is to commence operations against Mobile as soon as he can. It will be impossible for him to commence too early.

Gillmore joins Butler with ten thousand men, and the two operate against Richmond from the south side of the James River. This will give Butler thirty-three thousand men to operate with, W. F. Smith commanding the right wing of his forces and Gillmore the left wing. I will stay with the Army of the Potomac, increased by Burnside’s corps of not less than twenty-five thousand effective men, and operate directly against Lee’s army wherever it may be found.

Sigel collects all his available force in two columns, one, under Ord and Averell, to start from Beverly, Virginia, and the other, under Crook, to start from Charleston on the Kanawha, to move against the Virginia and Tennessee railroad.

Crook will have all cavalry, and will endeavor to get in about Saltville, and move east from there to join Ord. His force will be all cavalry, while Ord will have to move from the mouth of the Gauley River with a cavalry force and some artillery, the Virginia and Tennessee railroad to be his objective. Either the enemy would have to keep a large force to protect his communications, or see them destroyed, and a large amount of forage and provision, which he so much needed, fall into our hands. Sigel was in command in the Valley of Virginia. He was to advance up the valley, covering the North from an invasion through that channel as well while advancing as by remaining near Harper's Ferry. Every mile he advanced also gave us possession of stores on which Lee relied. Butler was to advance by the James River, having Richmond and Petersburg as his objective.

from ten to twelve thousand men of all arms.

You I propose to move against Johnston's army, to break it up and to get into the interior of the enemy's country as far as you can, inflicting all the damage you can against their war resources.

I do not propose to lay down for you a plan of campaign, but simply lay down the work it is desirable to have done, and leave you free to execute it in your own way. Submit to me, however, as early as you can, your plan of operations.

As stated, Banks is ordered to commence operations as soon as he can. Gillmore is ordered to report at Fortress Monroe by the 18th inst., or as soon thereafter as practicable. Sigel is concentrating now. None will move from their places of rendezvous until I direct, except Banks. I want to be ready to move by the 25th inst., if possible. But all I can now direct is that you get ready as soon as possible. I know you will have difficulties to encounter in getting through the mountains where supplies are abundant, but I believe you will accomplish it.

From the expedition from the Department of West Virginia I do not calculate on very great results; but it is the only way I can take troops from there. With the long line of railroad Sigel has to protect, he can spare no troops except to move directly to his front. In this way he must get through to inflict great damage on the enemy, or the enemy must detach from one of his armies a large force to prevent it. In other words, if Sigel can't skin himself he can hold a leg while some one else skins.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
Before the advance commenced I visited Butler at Fort Monroe. This was the first time I had ever met him. Before giving him any order as to the part he was to play in the approaching campaign I invited his views. They were very much such as I intended to direct, and as I did direct,¹ in writing, before leaving.

General W. F. Smith, who had been promoted to the rank of major-general shortly after the battle of Chattanooga on my recommendation, had not yet been confirmed. I found a decided prejudice against his confirmation by a majority of the Senate, but I insisted that his services had been such that he should be rewarded. My wishes were now reluctantly complied with, and I assigned him to the command of one of the corps under General Butler. I was not long in finding out that the objections to Smith’s promotion were well founded.

In one of my early interviews with the President I expressed my dissatisfaction with the little that had been accomplished by the cavalry so far in the war, and the belief that it was capable of accomplishing much more than it had done if under a thorough leader. I said I wanted the very best man in the army for that command. Halleck was present and spoke up, saying, “How would Sheridan do?” I replied, “The very man I want.” The President said I could have anybody I wanted. Sheridan was telegraphed for that day, and on his arrival was assigned to the command of the cavalry corps with the Army of the Potomac. This relieved General Alfred Pleasonton. It was not a reflection on that officer, however, for I did not know but that he had been as efficient as any other cavalry commander.

¹ See instructions to Butler, in General Grant’s report, Appendix, and in the Official Records as cited in the margin. — F. D. G.

Banks in the Department of the Gulf was ordered to assemble all the troops he had at New Orleans in time to join in the general move, Mobile to be his objective.

At this time I was not entirely decided as to whether I should move the Army of the Potomac by the right flank of the enemy or by his left. Each plan presented advantages.\(^1\) If by his right

---

\(^1\) In Field, Culpeper C. H., Virginia, April 9, 1864. Maj.-Gen. George G. Meade, Com’dg Army of the Potomac:

For information and as instruction to govern your preparations for the coming campaign, the following is communicated confidentially for your own perusal alone.

So far as practicable all the armies are to move together, and toward one common center. Banks has been instructed to turn over the guardiing of the Red River to General Steele and the navy, to abandon Texas with the exception of the Rio Grande, and to concentrate all the force he can—not less than twenty-five thousand men—to move on Mobile. This he is to do without reference to other movements. From the scattered condition of his command, however, he cannot possibly get it together to leave New Orleans before the 1st of May, if so soon. Sherman will move at the same time you do, or two or three days in advance, Joe Johnston’s army being his objective point, and the heart of Georgia his ultimate aim. If successful he will secure the line from Chattanooga to Mobile with the aid of Banks.

Sigel cannot spare troops from his army to reinforce either of the great armies, but he can aid them by moving directly to his front. This he has been directed to do, and is now making preparations for it. Two columns of his command will make south at the same time with the general move: one from Beverly, from ten to twelve thousand strong, under Major-General Ord; the other from Charleston, Virginia, principally cavalry, under Brigadier-General Crook. The former of these will endeavor to reach the Tennessee and Virginia railroad, about south of Covington, and if found practicable will work eastward to Lynchburg and return to its base by way of the Shenandoah Valley, or join you. The other will strike at Saltville, Virginia, and come eastward to join Ord. The cavalry from Ord’s command will try to force a passage southward, if they are successful in my left—the Potomac, Chesapeake Bay, and tributaries would furnish us an easy line over which to bring all supplies to within easy hauling distance of every position the army could occupy from the Rapidan to the James River. But Lee could, if he chose, detach or move his whole army north on a line rather interior to the one I would have to take in following. A movement by his left—our right—would obviate this; but all that was done would have to be done with the supplies and ammunition we started with. All idea of adopting this latter plan was abandoned when the limited quantity of supplies possible to take with us was considered. The country over which we would have to pass was so exhausted of all food or forage that we would be obliged to carry everything with us.

reaching the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, to cut the main lines of the road connecting Richmond with all the South and Southwest.

Gillmore will join Butler with about ten thousand men from South Carolina. Butler can reduce his garrison so as to take twenty-three thousand men into the field directly to his front. The force will be commanded by Major-General W. F. Smith. With Smith and Gillmore, Butler will seize City Point, and operate against Richmond from the south side of the river. His movement will be simultaneous with yours.

Lee's army will be your objective point. Wherever Lee goes there you will go also. The only point upon which I am now in doubt is whether it will be better to cross the Rapidan above or below him. Each plan presents great advantages over the other, with corresponding objections. By crossing above, Lee is cut off from all chance of ignoring Richmond and going north on a raid. But if we take this route all we do must be done whilst the rations we start with hold out. We separate from Butler, so that he cannot be directed how to cooperate. By the other route Brandy Station can be used as a base of supplies until another is secured on the York or James rivers.

These advantages and objections I will talk over with you more fully than I can write them.

Burnside, with a force of probably twenty-five thousand men, will reinforce you. Immediately upon his arrival, which will be While these preparations were going on the enemy was not entirely idle. In the West, Forrest made a raid in West Tennessee up to the northern border, capturing the garrison of four or five hundred men at Union City, and followed it up by an attack on Paducah, Kentucky, on the banks of the Ohio. While he was able to enter the city, he failed to capture the forts or any part of the garrison. On the first intelligence of Forrest's raid I telegraphed Sherman to send all his cavalry against him, and not to let him get out of the trap he had put himself into. Sherman had anticipated me by sending troops against him before he got my order.

Forrest, however, fell back rapidly, and attacked the troops at Fort Pillow, a station for the protection of the navigation of the Mississippi River. The garrison consisted of a regiment of colored shortly after the 20th inst., I will give him the defense of the road from Bull Run as far south as we wish to hold it. This will enable you to collect all your strength about Brandy Station and to the front.

There will be naval cooperation on the James River, and transports and ferries will be provided, so that should Lee fall back into his intrenchments at Richmond, Butler's force and yours will be a unit, or at least can be made to act as such. What I would direct, then, is that you commence at once reducing baggage to the very lowest possible standard. Two wagons to a regiment of five hundred men is the greatest number that should be allowed for all baggage, exclusive of subsistence stores and ordnance stores. One wagon to brigade and one to division headquarters is sufficient, and about two to corps headquarters.

Should by Lee's right flank be our route, you will want to make arrangements for having supplies of all sorts promptly forwarded to White House on the Pamunkey. Your estimates for this contingency should be made at once. If not wanted there, there is every probability they will be wanted on the James River or elsewhere. If Lee's left is turned, large provision will have to be made for ordnance stores. I would say not much short of five hundred rounds of infantry ammunition would do. By the other, half the amount would be sufficient.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
troops, infantry, and a detachment of Tennessee cavalry. These troops fought bravely, but were overpowered. I will leave Forrest in his despatches to tell what he did with them.

"The river was dyed," he says, "with the blood of the slaughtered for two hundred yards. The approximate loss was upward of five hundred killed, but few of the officers escaping. My loss was about twenty killed. It is hoped that these facts will demonstrate to the Northern people that negro soldiers cannot cope with Southerners." Subsequently Forrest made a report in which he left out the part which shocks humanity to read.

At the East, also, the rebels were busy. I had said to Halleck that Plymouth and Washington, North Carolina, were unnecessary to hold. It would be better to have the garrisons engaged there added to Butler's command. If success attended our arms, both places, and others too, would fall into our hands naturally. These places had been occupied by Federal troops before I took command of the armies, and I knew that the Executive would be reluctant to abandon them, and therefore explained my views; but before my views were carried out the rebels captured the garrison at Plymouth. I then ordered the abandonment of Washington, but directed the holding of New Berne at all hazards. This was essential because New Berne was a port into which blockade-runners could enter.

General Banks had gone on an expedition up the Red River long before my promotion to general command. I had opposed the movement strenuously, but acquiesced because it was the order of Executive Mansion
Washington, April 30, 1864

Lieutenant General Grant.

Not expecting to see you again before the spring campaign opens, I wish to express, in this way, my entire satisfaction with what you have done up to this time, so far as I understand it. The particulars of your plans I neither know or seek to know. You are vigilant and self-reliant, and plea se with this, I wish not to unduly any constraint or restrictions upon you. While I am very anxious that any great disaster, or the capture of our men in great numbers, shall be avoided, I know these points are less likely to escape your attention than they would be mine—If there is anything wanting which is within my power to give, do not fail to let me know it.

And now with a brave Army, and a just cause, may God sustain you.

Yours very truly,

Lincoln.

LINCOLN'S GOD-SPEED TO GRANT. (FAC-SIMILE OF THE ORIGINAL, SLIGHTLY REDUCED IN SCALE.)

[This remarkable letter was received by General Grant on the 1st of May, three days before the Wilderness campaign began. He was always careless about his papers, and private or semi-official ones were often thrust into his pockets, where they remained for months. In some such way Mr. Lincoln's beautiful God-speed was mislaid. General Grant had forgotten its existence, until in 1866 I came across it in my researches for my history of his campaigns. He was so pleased at the discovery, or recovery, that he gave me the original letter at the time. It is my intention eventually to present it either to the government or to the family of General Grant.

Adam Badeau.

New York, November 10, 1885.]
my superior at the time. By direction of Halleck I had reinforced Banks with a corps of about ten thousand men from Sherman's command. This reinforcement was wanted back badly before the forward movement commenced. But Banks had got so far that it seemed best that he should take Shreveport on the Red River, and turn over the line of that river to Steele, who commanded in Arkansas, to hold instead of the line of the Arkansas. Orders were given accordingly, and with the expectation that the campaign would be ended in time for Banks to return A. J. Smith's command to where it belonged and get back to New Orleans himself in time to execute his part in the general plan. But the expedition was a failure. Banks did not get back in time to take part in the programme as laid down. Nor was Smith returned until long after the movements of May, 1864, had been begun. The services of forty thousand veteran troops, over and above the number required to hold all that was necessary in the Department of the Gulf, were thus paralyzed. It is but just to Banks, however, to say that his expedition was ordered from Washington, and he was in no way responsible except for the conduct of it. I make no criticism on this point. He opposed the expedition.

By the 27th of April spring had so far advanced as to justify me in fixing a day for the great move. On that day Burnside left Annapolis to occupy Meade's position between Bull Run and the Rappahannock. Meade was notified and directed to bring his troops forward to his advance. On the following day Butler was notified of my intended advance on the 4th of May, and he was directed to move the night of the same day and get as far up the James River as possible by daylight, and push on from there to accomplish the task given him. He was also notified that reinforcements were being collected in Washington City, which would be forwarded to him should the enemy fall back into the trenches at Richmond. The same day Sherman was directed to get his forces up ready to advance on the 5th. Sigel was in Winchester and was notified to move in conjunction with the others.

Vol. II.—5

The criticism has been made by writers on the campaign from the Rapidan to the James River that all the loss of life could have been obviated by moving the army there on transports. Richmond was fortified and intrenched so perfectly that one man inside to defend was more than equal to five outside besieging or assaulting. To get possession of Lee's army was the first great object. With the capture of his army Richmond would necessarily follow. It was better to fight him outside of his stronghold than in it. If the Army of the Potomac had been moved bodily to the James River by water, Lee could have moved a part of his forces back to Richmond, called Beauregard from the south to reinforce it, and with the balance moved on to Washington. Then, too, I ordered a move, simultaneous with that of the Army of the Potomac, up the James River by a formidable army already collected at the mouth of the river.

While my headquarters were at Culpeper, from the 26th of March to the 4th of May, I generally visited Washington once a week to confer with the Secretary of War and President. On the last occasion, a few days before moving, a circumstance occurred which came near postponing my part in the campaign altogether. Colonel John S. Mosby had for a long time been commanding a partizan corps, or regiment, which operated in the rear of the Army of the Potomac. On my return to the field on this occasion, as the train approached Warrenton Junction, a heavy cloud of dust was seen to the east of the road, as if made by a body of cavalry on a charge. Arriving at the junction the train was stopped and inquiries made as to the cause of the dust. There was but one man at the station, and he informed us that Mosby had crossed a few minutes before at full speed in pursuit of Federal cavalry. Had he seen our train coming, no doubt he would have let his prisoners escape to capture the train. I was on a special train, if I remember correctly, without any guard.

Since the close of the war I have come to know Colonel Mosby personally, and somewhat intimately. He is a different man entirely from what I had supposed. He is slender, not tall, wiry, and looks as if he could endure any amount of physical exercise. He is able, and thoroughly honest and truthful. There were probably but few men in the South who could have commanded successfully a separate detachment in the rear of an opposing army, and so near the border of hostilities, as long as he did without losing his entire command.

On this same visit to Washington I had my last interview with the President before reaching the James River. He had of course become acquainted with the fact that a general movement had been ordered all along the line, and seemed to think it a new feature in war. I explained to him that it was necessary to have a great number of troops to guard and hold the territory we had captured, and to prevent incursions into the Northern States. These troops could perform this service just as well by advancing as by remaining still; and by advancing they would compel the enemy to keep detachments to hold them back, or else lay his own territory open to invasion. His answer was, "Oh yes! I see that. As we say out West, if a man can't skin he must hold a leg while somebody else does."

There was a certain incident connected with the Wilderness campaign of which it may not be out of place to speak; and to avoid a digression further on I will mention it here.

A few days before my departure from Culpeper the Honorable E. B. Washburne visited me there, and remained with my headquarters for some distance south, through the battle in the Wilderness, and, I think, to Spottsylvania. He was accompanied by a Mr. Swinton, whom he presented as a literary gentleman who wished to accompany the army with a view of writing a history of the war when it was over. He assured me—and I have no doubt Swinton gave him the assurance—that he was not present as a correspondent of the press. I expressed an entire willingness to have him (Swinton) accompany the army, and would have allowed him to do so as a correspondent, restricted, however, in the character of the information he could give. We received Richmond papers with about as much regularity as if there had been no war, and knew that our papers were received with equal regularity by the Confederates. It was desirable, therefore, that correspondents should not be privileged spies of the enemy within our lines.

Probably Mr. Swinton expected to be an invited guest at my headquarters, and was disappointed that he was not asked to become so. At all events, he was not invited, and soon I found that he was corresponding with some paper (I have now forgotten which one), thus violating his word either expressed or implied. He knew of the assurance Washburne had given as to the character of his mission. I never saw the man from the day of our introduction to the present that I recollect. He accompanied us, however, for a time at least.

The second night after crossing the Rapidan (the night of the 5th of May), Colonel W. R. Rowley, of my staff, was acting as night-officer at my headquarters. A short time before midnight I gave him verbal instructions for the night. Three days later I read in a Richmond paper a verbatim report of these instructions.

A few nights still later (after the first, and possibly after the second, day's fighting in the Wilderness) General Meade came to my tent for consultation, bringing with him some of his staff-officers. Both his staff and mine retired to the camp-fire some yards in front of the tent, thinking our conversation should be private. There was a stump a little to one side, and between the front of the tent and the camp-fire. One of my staff, Colonel T. S. Bowers, saw what he took to be a man seated on the ground and leaning against the stump, listening to the conversation between Meade and myself. He called the attention of Colonel Rowley to it. The latter immediately took the man by the shoulder and asked him, in language more forcible than polite, what he was doing there. The man proved to be Swinton, the "historian," and his replies to the question were evasive and unsatisfactory, and he was warned against further eavesdropping.

The next I heard of Mr. Swinton was at Cold Harbor. General Meade came to my headquarters saying that General Burnside had arrested Swinton, who at some previous time had given great offense, and had ordered him to be shot that afternoon. I promptly ordered the prisoner to be released, but that he must be expelled from the lines of the army, not to return again on pain of punishment.
CHAPTER VI

COMMENCEMENT OF THE GRAND CAMPAIGN—GENERAL BUTLER'S POSITION—SHERIDAN'S FIRST RAID

The armies were now all ready to move for the accomplishment of a single object. They were acting as a unit, so far as such a thing was possible over such a vast field. Lee, with the capital of the Confederacy, was the main end to which all were working. Johnston, with Atlanta, was an important obstacle in the way of our accomplishing the result aimed at, and was therefore almost an independent objective. It was of less importance only because the capture of Johnston and his army

Note.—At this stage of the work the final decline in General Grant's strength became clearly manifest, and it was found necessary to bring his task to a close as soon and as easily as possible. For this reason the notes and memoranda which he had collected for the purpose of refreshing his memory, and of forming the framework upon which the narrative might be constructed from recollection and from the manuscript field-records in his possession, were hastily put together with little of the careful original work which the subject would have received under different circumstances; and the scheme of presenting the final scenes of the war as a panorama of one vast campaign directed by the central power—the Lieutenant-General of the Army of the United States—had to be abandoned. Had this plan for the book been followed, the separate armies would have been treated as but parts of one, of which the Army of the Potomac would have formed the center, the troops west and east of that army being regarded as wings, and those to the south of the enemy as an attacking force in the rear.

Frederick D. Grant.
would not produce so immediate and decisive a result in closing the rebellion as would the possession of Richmond, Lee, and his army. All other troops were employed exclusively in support of these two movements. This was the plan; and I will now endeavor to give, as concisely as I can, the method of its execution, outlining first the operations of minor detached but coöperative columns.

As stated before, Banks failed to accomplish what he had been sent to do on the Red River, and eliminated the use of forty thousand veterans whose coöperation in the grand campaign had been expected—ten thousand with Sherman and thirty thousand against Mobile.

Sigel's record is almost equally brief. He moved out, it is true, according to programme; but just when I was hoping to hear of good work being done in the valley, I received instead the following announcement from Halleck: "Sigel is in full retreat on Strasburg. He will do nothing but run; never did anything else." The enemy had intercepted him about New Market and handled him roughly, leaving him short six guns, and some nine hundred men out of his six thousand.

The plan had been for an advance of Sigel's forces in two columns. Though the one under his immediate command failed ingloriously, the other proved more fortunate. Under Crook and Averell his western column advanced from the Gauley in West Virginia at the appointed time, and with more happy results. They reached the Virginia and Tennessee railroad at Dublin and destroyed a depot of supplies, besides tearing up several miles of road and burning the bridge over New River.
Fold-out Placeholder

This fold-out is being digitized, and will be inserted at a future date.
Fold-out Placeholder

This fold-out is being digitized, and will be inserted at a future date.
Having accomplished this, they recrossed the Alleghanies to Meadow Bluffs and there awaited further orders.

Butler embarked at Fort Monroe with all his command, except the cavalry and some artillery which moved up the south bank of the James River. His steamers moved first up Chesapeake Bay and York River as if threatening the rear of Lee's army. At midnight they turned back, and Butler by daylight was far up the James River. He seized City Point and Bermuda Hundred early in the day, without loss, and, no doubt, very much to the surprise of the enemy.

This was the accomplishment of the first step contemplated in my instructions to Butler. He was to act from here, looking to Richmond as his objective point. I had given him to understand that I should aim to fight Lee between the Rapidan and Richmond if he would stand; but should Lee fall back into Richmond I would follow up and make a junction of the armies of the Potomac and the James on the James River. He was directed to secure a footing as far up the south side of the river as he could, at as early a date as possible.

Butler was in position by the 6th of May and had begun intrenching, and on the 7th he sent out his cavalry from Suffolk to cut the Weldon railroad. He also sent out detachments to destroy the railroad between Petersburg and Richmond, but no great success attended these latter efforts. He made no great effort to establish himself on that road and neglected to attack Petersburg, which was almost defenseless. About the 11th he advanced slowly until he reached the works at Drury's Bluff, about half-way between Bermuda Hundred and Richmond. In the mean time Beauregard had been gathering reinforcements. On the 16th he attacked Butler with great vigor, and with such success as to limit very materially the further usefulness of the Army of the James as a distinct factor in the campaign. I afterward ordered a portion of it to join the Army of the Potomac, leaving a sufficient force with Butler to man his works, hold securely the footing he had already gained, and maintain a threatening front toward the rear of the Confederate capital.

The position which General Butler had chosen between the two rivers, the James and Appomattox, was one of great natural strength, one where a large area of ground might be thoroughly inclosed by means of a single intrenched line, and that a very short one in comparison with the extent of territory which it thoroughly protected. His right was protected by the James River, his left by the Appomattox, and his rear by their junction—the two streams uniting near by. The bends of the two streams shortened the line that had been chosen for intrenchments, while they increased the area which the line inclosed.

Previous to ordering any troops from Butler I sent my chief engineer, General Barnard, from the Army of the Potomac to that of the James to inspect Butler's position and ascertain whether I could again safely make an order for General Butler's movement in coöperation with mine, now that I was getting so near Richmond; or, if I could not, whether his position was strong enough to justify me in withdrawing some of his troops and having them brought round by water to White House to join me and reinforce the Army of the Potomac. General Barnard reported the position very strong for defensive purposes, and that I could do the latter with great security; but that General Butler could not move from where he was, in cooperation, to produce any effect. He said that the general occupied a place between the James and Appomattox rivers which was of great strength, and where with an inferior force he could hold it for an indefinite length of time against a superior; but that he could do nothing offensively. I then asked him why Butler could not move out from his lines and push across the Richmond and Petersburg railroad to the rear and on the south side of Richmond. He replied that it was impracticable, because the enemy had substantially the same line across the neck of land that General Butler had. He then took out his pencil and drew a sketch of the locality, remarking that the position was like a bottle, and that Butler's line of intrenchments across the neck represented the cork; that the enemy had built an equally strong line immediately in front of him across the neck; and it was therefore as if Butler was in a bottle. He was perfectly safe against an attack; but, as Barnard expressed it, the enemy had corked the bottle and with a small force could hold the cork in its place. This struck me as being very expressive of his position, particularly when I saw the hasty sketch which General Barnard had drawn; and in making my subsequent report I used that expression without adding quotation-marks, never thinking that anything had been said that would attract attention—as this did, very much to the annoyance, no doubt, of General Butler, and, I know, very much to my own. I found afterward that this was mentioned in the notes of General Badeau's book, which, when they were shown to me, I asked to have stricken out; yet it was retained there, though against my wishes.

I make this statement here because, although I have often made it before, it has never been in my power until now to place it where it will correct history; and I desire to rectify all injustice that I may have done to individuals, particularly to officers who were gallantly serving their country during the trying period of the war for the preservation of the Union. General Butler certainly gave his very earnest support to the war; and he gave his own best efforts personally to the suppression of the rebellion.

The further operations of the Army of the James can best be treated of in connection with those of the Army of the Potomac, the two being so intimately associated and connected as to be substantially one body in which the individuality of the supporting wing is merged.

Before giving the reader a summary of Sherman's great Atlanta campaign, which must conclude my description of the various coöperative movements preparatory to proceeding with that of the operations of the center, I will briefly mention Sheridan's first raid upon Lee's communications, which, though an incident of the operations on the main line and not specifically marked out in the original plan, attained in its brilliant execution and results all the proportions of an independent campaign.
By thus anticipating, in point of time, I will be able to more perfectly observe the continuity of events occurring in my immediate front when I shall have undertaken to describe our advance from the Rapidan.

On the 8th of May, just after the battle of the Wilderness, and when we were moving on Spottsylvania, I directed Sheridan verbally to cut loose from the Army of the Potomac, pass around the left of Lee's army, and attack his cavalry; to cut the two roads—one running west through Gordonsville, Charlottesville, and Lynchburg, the other to Richmond—and, when compelled to do so for want of forage and rations, to move on to the James River and draw these from Butler's supplies. This move took him past the entire rear of Lee's army. These orders were also given in writing through Meade.

The object of this move was threefold. First, if successfully executed—and it was—he would annoy the enemy by cutting his line of supplies and telegraphic communications, and destroy or get for his own use supplies in store in the rear and coming up. Second, he would draw the enemy's cavalry after him, and thus better protect our flanks, rear, and trains than by remaining with the army. Third, his absence would save the trains drawing his forage and other supplies from Fredericksburg, which had now become our base. He started at daylight the next morning, and accomplished more than was expected. It was sixteen days before he got back to the Army of the Potomac.

The course Sheridan took was directly to Rich-
Stuart, commanding the Confederate cavalry, came on to the rear of his command. But the advance kept on, crossed the North Anna, and at Beaver Dam, a station on the Virginia Central railroad, recaptured four hundred Union prisoners on their way to Richmond, destroyed the road, and used and destroyed a large amount of subsistence and medical stores.

Stuart, seeing that our cavalry was pushing toward Richmond, abandoned the pursuit on the morning of the 10th, and, by a detour and an exhausting march, interposed between Sheridan and Richmond at Yellow Tavern, only about six miles north of the city. Sheridan destroyed the railroad and more supplies at Ashland, and on the 11th arrived in Stuart's front. A severe engagement ensued in which the losses were heavy on both sides; but the rebels were beaten, their leader mortally wounded, and some guns and many prisoners were captured.

Sheridan passed through the outer defenses of Richmond, and could, no doubt, have passed through the inner ones. But having no supports near, he could not have remained. After caring for his wounded he struck for the James River below the city, to communicate with Butler and to rest his men and horses, as well as to get food and forage for them.

He moved first between the Chickahominy and the James, but in the morning (the 12th) he was stopped by batteries at Mechanicsville. He then turned to cross to the north side of the Chickahominy by Meadow Bridge. He found this barred, and the defeated Confederate cavalry, reorganized, occupying the opposite side. The panic created by his first entrance within the outer works of Richmond having subsided, troops were sent out to attack his rear.

He was now in a perilous position, one from which but few generals could have extricated themselves. The defenses of Richmond, manned, were to the right; the Chickahominy was to the left, with no bridge remaining and the opposite bank guarded; to the rear was a force from Richmond.
This force was attacked and beaten by Wilson's and Gregg's divisions, while Sheridan turned to the left with the remaining division and hastily built a bridge over the Chickahominy under the fire of the enemy, forced a crossing, and soon dispersed the Confederates he found there. The enemy was held back from the stream by the fire of the troops not engaged in bridge-building.

On the 13th Sheridan was at Bottom's Bridge, over the Chickahominy. On the 14th he crossed this stream, and on that day went into camp on the James River at Haxall's Landing. He at once put himself into communication with General Butler, who directed all the supplies he wanted to be furnished.

Sheridan had left the Army of the Potomac at Spottsylvania, but did not know where either this or Lee's army was now. Great caution, therefore, had to be exercised in getting back. On the 17th, after resting his command for three days, he started on his return. He moved by the way of White House. The bridge over the Pamunkey had been burned by the enemy, but a new one was speedily improvised and the cavalry crossed over it. On the 22d he was at Aylett's on the Mattaponi, where he learned the position of the two armies. On the 24th he joined us on the march from North Anna to Cold Harbor, in the vicinity of Chesterfield.

Sheridan in this memorable raid passed entirely around Lee's army; encountered his cavalry in four engagements, and defeated them in all; recaptured four hundred Union prisoners and killed and captured many of the enemy; destroyed and used many supplies and munitions of war; destroyed miles of railroad and telegraph; and freed us from annoyance by the cavalry of the enemy for more than two weeks.
CHAPTER VII

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN IN GEORGIA—SIEGE OF ATLANTA —DEATH OF GENERAL MCPHERSON—ATTEMPT TO CAPTURE ANDERSONVILLE—CAPTURE OF ATLANTA

AFTER separating from Sherman in Cincinnati
I went on to Washington, as already stated, while he returned to Nashville to assume the duties of his new command. His military division was now composed of four departments and embraced all the territory west of the Alleghany Mountains and east of the Mississippi River, together with the State of Arkansas in the trans-Mississippi. The most easterly of these was the Department of the Ohio, General Schofield commanding; the next was the Department of the Cumberland, General Thomas commanding; the third the Department of the Tennessee, General McPherson commanding; and General Steele still commanded the trans-Mississippi, or Department of Arkansas. The last-named department was so far away that Sherman could not communicate with it very readily after starting on his spring campaign, and it was therefore soon transferred from his military division to that of the Gulf, where General Canby, who had relieved General Banks, was in command.

The movements of the armies, as I have stated in
Vol. II.—6

E. R. S. Can-
by, W. P.
1835-39 ;
Mexico,
1847-48 ;
Brig.-Gen.
31,1862; Maj.-
Gen. May 7, 1864
a former chapter, were to be simultaneous, I fixing the day to start, when the season should be far enough advanced, it was hoped, for the roads to be in a condition for the troops to march.

General Sherman at once set himself to work preparing for the task which was assigned him to accomplish in the spring campaign. McPherson lay at Huntsville with about twenty-four thousand men, guarding those points of Tennessee which were regarded as most worth holding; Thomas, with over sixty thousand men of the Army of the Cumberland, was at Chattanooga; and Schofield, with about fourteen thousand men, was at Knoxville. With these three armies, numbering about one hundred thousand men in all, Sherman was to move on the day fixed for the general advance, with a view of destroying Johnston's army and capturing Atlanta.
He visited each of these commands to inform himself as to their condition, and it was found to be, speaking generally, good.

One of the first matters to turn his attention to was that of getting, before the time arrived for starting, an accumulation of supplies forward to Chattanooga sufficiently large to warrant a movement. He found, when he got to that place, that the trains over the single-track railroad, which was frequently interrupted for a day or two at a time, were only sufficient to meet the daily wants of the troops, without bringing forward any surplus of any kind. He found, however, that trains were being used to transport all the beef-cattle, horses for the cavalry, and even teams that were being brought to the front. He at once changed all this, and required beef-cattle, teams, cavalry horses, and everything that could travel, even the troops, to be marched, and used the road exclusively for transporting supplies. In this way he was able to accumulate an abundance before the time finally fixed upon for the move, the 4th of May.

As I have said already, Johnston was at Dalton, which was nearly one fourth of the way between Chattanooga and Atlanta. The country is mountainous all the way to Atlanta, abounding in mountain streams, some of them of considerable volume. Dalton is on ground where water drains toward Atlanta and into one of the main streams rising northeast from there and flowing southwest—this being the general direction which all the main streams of that section take, with smaller tributaries entering into them. Johnston had been preparing himself for this campaign during the entire winter. The best positions for defense had been selected all the way from Dalton back to Atlanta, and very strongly intrenched; so that, as he might be forced to fall back from one position, he would have another to fall into in his rear. His position at Dalton was so very strongly intrenched that no doubt he expected, or at least hoped, to hold Sherman there and prevent him from getting any farther. With a less skilful general, and one disposed to take no risks, I have no doubt that he would have succeeded.

Sherman's plan was to start Schofield, who was farthest back, a few days in advance from Knoxville, having him move on the direct road to Dalton. Thomas was to move out to Ringgold. It had been Sherman's intention to cross McPherson over the Tennessee River at Huntsville or Decatur, and move him south from there so as to have him come into the road running from Chattanooga to Atlanta a good distance to the rear of the point Johnston was occupying; but when that was contemplated it was hoped that McPherson alone would have troops enough to cope with Johnston, if the latter should move against him while unsupported by the balance of the army. In this he was disappointed. Two of McPherson's veteran divisions had reënlisted on the express provision that they were to have a furlough. This furlough had not yet expired, and they were not back.

Then, again, Sherman had lent Banks two divisions under A. J. Smith, the winter before, to coöperate with the trans-Mississippi forces, and this with the express pledge that they should be back by a time specified, so as to be prepared for this very campaign. It is hardly necessary to say they were not returned. That department continued to absorb troops to no purpose to the end of the war. This left McPherson so weak that the part of the plan above indicated had to be changed. He was therefore brought up to Chattanooga and moved from there on a road to the right of Thomas—the two coming together about Dalton. The three armies were abreast, all ready to start promptly on time.

Sherman soon found that Dalton was so strongly fortified that it was useless to make any attempt to carry it by assault; and even to carry it by regular approaches was impracticable. There was a narrowing up in the mountain, between the National and Confederate armies, through which a stream, a wagon-road, and a railroad ran. Besides, the stream had been dammed so that the valley was a lake. Through this gorge the troops would have to pass. McPherson was therefore sent around by the right, to come out by the way of Snake Creek Gap into the rear of the enemy. This was a surprise to Johnston, and about the 13th he decided to abandon his position at Dalton.

On the 15th there was very hard fighting about Resaca; but our cavalry, having been sent around to the right, got near the road in the enemy’s rear. Again Johnston fell back, our army pursuing. The pursuit was continued to Kingston, which was reached on the 19th with very little fighting, except that Newton’s division overtook the rear of Johnston’s army and engaged it. Sherman was now obliged to halt for the purpose of bringing up his railroad-trains. He was depending upon the railroad for all of his supplies, and as, of course, the railroad was wholly destroyed as Johnston fell back, it had to be rebuilt. This work was pushed forward night and day, and caused much less delay than most persons would naturally expect in a mountainous country where there were so many bridges to be rebuilt.

The campaign to Atlanta was managed with the most consummate skill, the enemy being flanked out of one position after another all the way there. It is true this was not accomplished without a good deal of fighting—some of it very hard fighting, rising to the dignity of very important battles—neither were single positions gained in a day. On the contrary, weeks were spent at some; and about Atlanta more than a month was consumed.

It was the 23d of May before the road was finished up to the rear of Sherman's army and the pursuit renewed. This pursuit brought him up to the vicinity of Allatoona. This place was very strongly intrenched, and naturally a very defensible position. An assault upon it was not thought of, but preparations were made to flank the enemy out of it. This was done by sending a large force around our right, by the way of Dallas, to reach the rear of the enemy. Before reaching there, however, they found the enemy fortified in their way, and there resulted hard fighting for about a week at a place called New Hope Church. On the left our troops also were fortified, and as close up to the enemy as they could get. They kept working still farther around to the left toward the railroad. This was the case more particularly with the cavalry. By the 4th of June Johnston found that he was being hemmed in so rapidly that he drew off, and Allatoona was left in our possession.

Allatoona, being an important place, was strongly intrenched for occupation by our troops before advancing farther, and made a secondary base of supplies. The railroad was finished up to that point, the intrenchments completed, storehouses provided for food, and the army got in readiness for a further advance. The rains, however, were falling in such torrents that it was impossible to move the army by the side roads which they would have to move upon in order to turn Johnston out of his new position.

While Sherman's army lay here, General F. P. Blair returned to it, bringing with him the two divisions of veterans who had been on furlough. Johnston had fallen back to Marietta and Kennesaw Mountain, where strong intrenchments awaited... him. At this latter place our troops made an assault upon the enemy's lines after having got their own lines up close to him, and failed, sustaining considerable loss. But during the progress of the battle Schofield was gaining ground to the left; and the cavalry on his left were gaining still more toward the enemy's rear. These operations were completed by the 3d of July, when it was found that Johnston had evacuated the place. He was pursued at once. Sherman had made every preparation to abandon the railroad, leaving a strong guard in his intrenchments. He had intended, moving out with twenty days' rations and plenty of ammunition, to come in on the railroad again at the Chattahoochee River. Johnston frustrated this plan by himself starting back as above stated. This time he fell back to the Chattahoochee.

About the 5th of July he was besieged again, Sherman getting easy possession of the Chattahoochee River both above and below him. The enemy was again flanked out of his position, or so frightened by flanking movements that on the night of the 9th he fell back across the river.

Here Johnston made a stand until the 17th, when Sherman's old tactics prevailed again and the final movement toward Atlanta began. Johnston was now relieved of the command, and Hood superseded him.

Johnston's tactics in this campaign do not seem to have met with much favor, either in the eyes of the administration at Richmond, or of the people of that section of the South in which he was commanding. The very fact of a change of commanders being ordered under such circumstances was... an indication of a change of policy, and that now they would become the aggressors—the very thing our troops wanted.

For my own part, I think that Johnston's tactics were right. Anything that could have prolonged the war a year beyond the time that it did finally close would probably have exhausted the North to such an extent that they might then have abandoned the contest and agreed to a separation.

Atlanta was very strongly intrenched all the way around in a circle about a mile and a half outside of the city. In addition to this, there were advanced intrenchments which had to be taken before a close siege could be commenced.

Sure enough, as indicated by the change of commanders, the enemy was about to assume the offensive. On the 20th he came out and attacked the Army of the Cumberland most furiously. Hooker's corps and Newton's and Johnson's divisions were the principal ones engaged in this contest, which lasted more than an hour; but the Confederates were then forced to fall back inside their main lines. The losses were quite heavy on both sides. On this day General Gresham, since our Postmaster-General, was very badly wounded. During the night Hood abandoned his outer lines, and our troops were advanced. The investment had not been relinquished for a moment during the day.

During the night of the 21st Hood moved out again, passing by our left flank, which was then in motion to get a position farther in rear of him, and a desperate battle ensued, which lasted most of the day of the 22d. At first the battle went very much in favor of the Confederates, our troops being somewhat surprised. While our troops were advancing they were struck in flank, and their flank was enveloped. But they had become too thorough veterans to be thrown into irreparable confusion by an unexpected attack when off their guard, and soon they were in order and engaging the enemy, with the advantage now of knowing where their antagonist was. The field of battle continued to expand until it embraced about seven miles of ground. Finally, however, and before night, the enemy was driven back into the city.¹

It was during this battle that McPherson, while passing from one column to another, was instantly killed. In his death the army lost one of its ablest, purest, and best generals.

Garrard had been sent out with his cavalry to get upon the railroad east of Atlanta and to cut it in the direction of Augusta. He was successful in this, and returned about the time of the battle. Rousseau had also come up from Tennessee with a small division of cavalry, having crossed the Tennessee River about Decatur and made a raid into Alabama. Finally, when hard pressed, he had come in, striking the railroad in rear of Sherman, and reported to him about this time.

The battle of the 22d is usually known as the

¹ General John A. Logan, upon whom devolved the command of the Army of the Tennessee during this battle, in his report gave our total loss in killed, wounded, and missing at 3521, and estimated that of the enemy to be not less than 10,000; and General G. M. Dodge, graphically describing to General Sherman the enemy's attack, the full weight of which fell first upon and was broken by his depleted command, remarks: "The disparity of forces can be seen from the fact that in the charge made by my two brigades under Fuller and Mersy they took 351 prisoners, representing forty-nine different regiments, eight brigades, and three divisions; and brought back eight battle-flags from the enemy."
Battle of Atlanta, although the city did not fall into our hands until the 2d of September. Preparations went on, as before, to flank the enemy out of his position. The work was tedious, and the lines that had to be maintained were very long. Our troops were gradually worked around to the east until they struck the road between Decatur and Atlanta. These lines were strongly fortified, as were those to the north and west of the city,—all as close up to the enemy’s lines as practicable,—in order to hold them with the smallest possible number of men, the design being to detach an army to move by our right and try to get upon the railroad down south of Atlanta.

On the 27th the movement by the right flank commenced. On the 28th the enemy struck our right flank, General Logan commanding, with great vigor. Logan intrenched himself hastily, and by that means was enabled to resist all assaults and inflict a great deal of damage upon the enemy. These assaults were continued to the middle of the afternoon, and resumed once or twice still later in the day. The enemy’s losses in these unsuccessful assaults were fearful.

During that evening the enemy in Logan’s front withdrew into the town. This now left Sherman’s army close up to the Confederate lines, extending from a point directly east of the city around by the north and west of it for a distance of fully ten miles; the whole of this line being intrenched, and made stronger every day they remained there.

In the latter part of July Sherman sent Stoneman to destroy the railroads to the south, about Macon. He was then to go east, and, if possible, release our prisoners about Andersonville. There were painful stories current at the time about the great hardships these prisoners had to endure in the way of general bad treatment, in the way in which they were housed, and in the way in which they were fed. Great sympathy was felt for them; and it was thought that even if they could be turned loose upon the country it would be a great relief to them. But the attempt proved a failure. McCook, who commanded a small brigade, was first reported to have been captured; but he got back, having inflicted a good deal of damage upon the enemy. He had also taken some prisoners; but encountering afterward a largely superior force of the enemy, he was obliged to drop his prisoners and get back as best he could with what men he had left. He had lost several hundred men out of his small command. On the 4th of August Colonel Adams, commanding a little brigade of about a thousand men, returned reporting Stoneman and all but himself as lost. I myself had heard around Richmond of the capture of Stoneman, and had sent Sherman word, which he received. The rumor was confirmed there, also, from other sources. A few days after Colonel Adams's return Colonel Capron also got in with a small detachment and confirmed the report of the capture of Stoneman with something less than a thousand men.

It seems that Stoneman, finding the escape of all his force was impossible, had made arrangements for the escape of two divisions. He covered the movement of these divisions to the rear with a force of about seven hundred men, and at length surrendered himself and this detachment to the commanding Confederate. In this raid, however, much damage was inflicted upon the enemy by the destruction of cars, locomotives, army wagons, manufactories of military supplies, etc.

On the 4th and 5th Sherman endeavored to get upon the railroad to our right, where Schofield was in command, but these attempts failed utterly. General Palmer was charged with being the cause of this failure, to a great extent, by both General Sherman and General Schofield; but I am not prepared to say this, although a question seems to have arisen with Palmer as to whether Schofield had any right to command him. If he did raise this question while an action was going on, that act alone was exceedingly reprehensible.

About the same time Wheeler got upon our railroad north of Resaca and destroyed it nearly up to Dalton. This cut Sherman off from communication with the North for several days. Sherman responded to this attack on his lines of communication by directing one upon theirs.

Kilpatrick started on the night of the 18th of August to reach the Macon road about Jonesboro. He succeeded in doing so, passed entirely around the Confederate lines of Atlanta, and was back again in his former position on our left by the 22d. These little affairs, however, contributed but very little to the grand result. They annoyed, it is true, but any damage thus done to a railroad by a cavalry expedition is soon repaired.

Sherman made preparations for a repetition of his tactics; that is, for a flank movement with as large a force as could be got together to some point in the enemy's rear. Sherman commenced this last movement on the 25th of August, and on the 1st of September was well up toward the railroad twenty miles south of Atlanta. Here he found Hardee intrenched, ready to meet him. A battle ensued, but he was unable to drive Hardee away before night set in. Under cover of the night, however, Hardee left of his own accord. That night Hood blew up his military works, such as he thought would be valuable in our hands, and decamped.

The next morning at daylight General H. W. Slocum, who was commanding north of the city, moved in and took possession of Atlanta, and notified Sherman. Sherman then moved deliberately back, taking three days to reach the city, and occupied a line extending from Decatur on the left to Atlanta in the center, with his troops extending out of the city for some distance to the right.

The campaign had lasted about four months, and was one of the most memorable in history. There was but little, if anything, in the whole campaign, now that it is over, to criticize at all, and nothing to criticize severely. It was creditable alike to the general who commanded and the army which had executed it. Sherman had on this campaign some bright, wide-awake division and brigade commanders whose alertness added a host to the efficiency of his command.

The troops now went to work to make themselves comfortable and to enjoy a little rest after their arduous campaign. The city of Atlanta was turned into a military base. The citizens were all compelled to leave. Sherman also very wisely prohibited the assembling of the army of sutlers and traders who always follow in the wake of an army.
in the field, if permitted to do so, for trading with the citizens and getting the money of the soldiers for articles of but little use to them, and for which they are made to pay most exorbitant prices. He limited the number of these traders to one for each of his three armies.

The news of Sherman’s success reached the North instantaneously and set the country all aglow. This was the first great political campaign for the Republicans in their canvass of 1864. It was followed later by Sheridan’s campaign in the Shenandoah Valley; and these two campaigns probably had more effect in settling the election of the following November than all the speeches, all the bonfires, and all the parading with banners and bands of music in the North.
CHAPTER VIII

GRAND MOVEMENT OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC—CROSSING THE RAPIDAN—ENTERING THE WILDERNESS—BATTLE OF THE WILDERNESS

SOON after midnight, May 3d-4th, the Army of the Potomac moved out from its position north of the Rapidan, to start upon that memorable campaign destined to result in the capture of the Confederate capital and the army defending it. This was not to be accomplished, however, without as desperate fighting as the world has ever witnessed; not to be consummated in a day, a week, a month, or a single season. The losses inflicted and endured were destined to be severe; but the armies now confronting each other had already been in deadly conflict for a period of three years, with immense losses in killed, by death from sickness, captured and wounded; and neither had made any real progress toward accomplishing the final end. It is true the Confederates had, so far, held their capital, and they claimed this to be their sole object. But previously they had boldly proclaimed their intention to capture Philadelphia, New York, and the National capital, and had made several attempts to do so, and once or twice had come fearfully near making their boast good—too near for complacent contemplation by the loyal North. They had also come near losing their own capital on at least one occasion. So here was a stand-off. The campaign now begun was destined to result in heavier losses to both armies, in a given time, than any previously suffered; but the carnage was to be limited to a single year, and to accomplish all that had been anticipated or desired at the beginning in that time. We had to have hard fighting to achieve this. The two armies had been confronting each other so long, without any decisive result, that they hardly knew which could whip.

Ten days' rations, with a supply of forage and ammunition, were taken in wagons. Beef-cattle were driven with the trains and butchered as wanted. Three days' rations in addition, in haversacks, and fifty rounds of cartridges, were carried on the person of each soldier.

The country over which the army had to operate, from the Rapidan to the crossing of the James River, is rather flat, and is cut by numerous streams which make their way to the Chesapeake Bay. The crossings of these streams by the army were generally made not far above tide-water, and where they formed a considerable obstacle to the rapid advance of troops even when the enemy did not appear in opposition. The country roads were narrow and poor. Most of the country is covered with a dense forest, in places, like the Wilderness and along the Chickahominy, almost impenetrable even for infantry except along the roads. All bridges were naturally destroyed before the National troops came to them.

The Army of the Potomac was composed of three infantry and one cavalry corps, commanded respectively by Generals W. S. Hancock, G. K. Warren, John Sedgwick, and P. H. Sheridan. The artillery was commanded by General Henry J. Hunt. This arm was in such abundance that the fourth of it could not be used to advantage in such a country as we were destined to pass through. The surplus was much in the way, taking up, as it did, so much of the narrow and bad roads, and consuming so much of the forage and other stores brought up by the trains.

The Fifth Corps, General Warren commanding, was in advance on the right, and marched directly for Germanna Ford, preceded by one division of UNION ARMY ON THE RAPIDAN, MAY 5, 1864.

Compiled.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL U. S. GRANT, Commander-in-Chief.

MAJOR-GENERAL GEORGE G. MEADE, commanding Army of the Potomac.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Fourth Division, Brig.-Gen. Gershom Mott.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
cavalry, under General J. H. Wilson. General Sedgwick followed Warren with the Sixth Corps. Germanna Ford was nine or ten miles below the right of Lee’s line. Hancock, with the Second Corps, moved by another road, farther east, directly upon Ely’s Ford, six miles below Germanna, preceded by Gregg’s division of cavalry, and followed by the artillery. Torbert’s division of cavalry was left north of the Rapidan, for the time, to picket the river and prevent the enemy from crossing and getting into our rear. The cavalry seized the two crossings before daylight, drove the enemy’s pickets guarding them away, and by 6 a.m. had the pontoons laid ready for the crossing of the infantry and artillery. This was undoubtedly a surprise to Lee. The fact that the movement was unopposed proves this.

First Division,
Brig.-Gen. Charles Griffin.

Second Division,

Third Division,
Brig.-Gen. Samuel W. Crawford.

Fourth Division,

First Brigade, Brig.-Gen. Romeyn B. Ayres.
Second Brigade, Col. Jacob B. Sweitzer.
Third Brigade, Brig.-Gen. J. J. Bartlett.

First Brigade, Col. Samuel H. Leonard.
Third Brigade, Col. Andrew W. Denison.

First Brigade, Col. Wm. McCandless.
First Brigade, Brig.-Gen. Lysander Cutler.
Third Brigade, Col. Roy Stone.
Artillery Brigade, Col. C. S. Wainwright.

MAJ.-GEN. G. K. WARREN, commanding
Fifth Army-corps.
Burnside, with the Ninth Corps, was left back at Warrenton, guarding the railroad from Bull Run forward to preserve control of it in case our crossing the Rapidan should be long delayed. He was instructed, however, to advance at once on receiving notice that the army had crossed; and a despatch was sent to him a little after 1 p.m. giving the information that our crossing had been successful.

The country was heavily wooded at all the points

---

Maj.-Gen. John Sedgwick, commanding Sixth Army-corps.

- First Division, Brig.-Gen. H. G. Wright.
- Second Division, Brig.-Gen. George W. Getty.
- Third Division, Brig.-Gen. James B. Ricketts.

- First Division, Brig.-Gen. A. T. A. Torbert.
- Second Division, Brig.-Gen. D. McM. Gregg. of crossing, particularly on the south side of the river. The battle-field from the crossing of the Rapidan until the final movement from the Wilderness toward Spotsylvania was of the same character. There were some clearings and small farms within what might be termed the battle-field; but generally the country was covered with a dense forest. The roads were narrow and bad. All the conditions were favorable for defensive operations.

There are two roads, good for that part of Virginia, running from Orange Court House to the battle-field. The most southerly of these roads is known as the Orange Court House Plank Road, the

| Major-General A. E. Burnside, commanding Ninth Army-corps. |
| First Division, Brig.-Gen. T. G. Stevenson. |
| Second Division, Brig.-Gen. Robert B. Potter. |
| Third Division, Brig.-Gen. Orlando B. Wilcox. |
| Fourth Division, Brig.-Gen. Edward Ferrero. |

| Major-General Henry J. Hunt, commanding Artillery. |
| First Brigade, Col. Sunner Carruth. |
| Second Brigade, Col. Daniel Leasure. |
| Third Brigade, Col. Zenas R. Bliss. |
| Fourth Brigade, Col. Simon G. Griffin. |
| Fifth Brigade, Col. John F. Hartranft. |
| Sixth Brigade, Col. Benj. C. Christ. |
| Seventh Brigade, Col. Joshua K. Sigfried. |
| Eighth Brigade, Col. Henry G. Thomas. |

| General Headquarters. |
| First Brigade, Col. J. H. Kitching. |
| Second Brigade, Maj. J. A. Tompkins. |
| First Brigade Horse Art., Capt. J. M. Robertson. |
| Second Brigade Horse Art., Capt. D. R. Ransom. |
| Third Brigade, Maj. R. H. Fitzhugh. |
| Provost Guard, Brig.-Gen. M. R. Patrick. |
northern one as the Orange Turnpike. There are also roads from east of the battle-field running to Spottsylvania Court House—one from Chancellorsville, branching at Aldrich's; the western branch going by Piney Branch Church, Alsop's, thence by the Brock road to Spottsylvania; the east branch

CONFEDERATE ARMY.

Organization of the Army of Northern Virginia, Commanded by GENERAL ROBERT E. LEE, August 31, 1864.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>M. D. Corse's</td>
<td>E. M. Law's (e)</td>
<td>B. G. Humphreys's</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Wm. R. Terry's</td>
<td>John Bratton's</td>
<td>Goode Bryan's</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>Kershaw's (Old)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John Pegram's</td>
<td>Geo. H. Stewart's</td>
<td>Geo. Doles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Gordon's</td>
<td>L. A. Stafford's</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; R. D. Johnston's</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

NOTE.

(a) Colonel W. R. Aylett was in command August 29th, and probably at above date.
(b) Inspection report of this division shows that it also contained Benning's and Gregg's Brigades.
(c) Commanded by Colonel P. D. Bowles.
(d) Only two brigadier-generals reported for duty; names not indicated.
(e) Constituting York's Brigade.
(f) In Ramseur's Division.
(g) Evan's Brigade, Colonel E. N. Atkinson, commanding, and containing Twelfth Georgia Battalion.
(h) The Virginia regiments constituted Terry's Brigade, Gordon's Division.
(i) Grimes's Brigade.
(j) Cook's

Organization of the Army of the Valley District.
The Brock road runs from Germanna Ford through the battlefield and on to the Court House. As Spottsylvania is approached the country is cut up with numerous roads, some going to the town direct, and others crossing so as to connect the farms with roads going there.

Lee's headquarters were at Orange Court House. From there to Fredericksburg he had the use of the two roads above described running nearly parallel to the Wilderness. This gave him unusual facilities, for that country, for concentrating his forces to his right. These roads strike the road from Germanna Ford in the Wilderness.

Maj.-Gen. Wm. Mahone's Division. (l)

| Brig.-Gen. J. C. C. Sanders's Brigade. |
| Majone's |
| A. R. Wright's |
| Joseph Finegan's |

Maj.-Gen. C. M. Wilcox's Division.

| Brig.-Gen. N. H. Harris's |
| James H. Lane's |
| Alfred M. Scale's |

Maj.-Gen. H. Heth's Division. (m)

| Brig.-Gen. E. L. Thomas's Brigade. |
| James H. Lane's |
| Sam'l McGowan's |
| Alfred M. Scale's |

Unattached: Fifth Alabama Battalion.

Cavalry Corps: Lieut.-Gen. Wade Hampton, Commanding. (p)

Maj.-Gen. Fitzhugh Lee's Division.

| Brig.-Gen. W. C. Wickham's Brigade. |
| L. L. Lomax's |

Maj.-Gen. M. C. Butler's Division.

| Brig.-Gen. John Dunovant's Brigade. |
| P. M. B. Young's |
| Thomas L. Rosser's |

| Brig.-Gen. Rufus Barringer's Brigade. |
| J. R. Chambliss's |

Note.

(l) Returns report but one general officer present for duty; name not indicated.

(m) Colonel Joseph M. Jayne, commanding.

(p) On face of returns appears to have consisted of Hampton's, Fitz-Lee's, and W. H. F. Lee's Divisions, and Dearing's Brigade.
As soon as the crossing of the infantry was assured, the cavalry pushed forward, Wilson's division by Wilderness Tavern to Parker's Store, on the Orange plank road; Gregg to the left toward Chancellorville. Warren followed Wilson and reached the Wilderness Tavern by noon, took position there, and intrenched. Sedgwick followed Warren. He was across the river and in camp on the south bank, on the right of Warren, by sundown. Hancock, with the Second Corps, moved parallel with Warren and Warren and

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cabell's Battalion.</td>
<td>Manly's Battery. First Co. Richmond Howitzers. Carleton's Battery. Calloway's</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Haskell's Battalion.</td>
<td>Branch's Battery. Nelson's Garden's Rowan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Huger's Battalion.</td>
<td>Smith's Battery. Moody Woolf Wood Taylor's Fickling's Martin's</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gibb's Battalion.</td>
<td>Davidson's Battery. Dickenson's Otey's</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Braxton's Battalion.</td>
<td>Lee Battery. First Maryland Artillery. Stafford Alleghany</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cutshaw's Battalion.</td>
<td>Charlottesville Artillery. Staunton Courtney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carter's Battalion.</td>
<td>Morris Artillery. Orange King William Artillery. Jeff Davis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nelson's Battalion.</td>
<td>Amherst Artillery. Milledge Fluanna Powhatan Artillery. Second Richmond Howitzers Third</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown's Battalion.</td>
<td>Rockbridge Artillery. Salem Flying</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 But one general officer reported present for duty in the artillery, and Alexander's name not on the original.
camped about six miles east of him. Before night all the troops, and by the evening of the 5th the trains of more than four thousand wagons, were safely on the south side of the river.

There never was a corps better organized than was the quartermaster's corps with the Army of the Potomac in 1864. With a wagon-train that would have extended from the Rapidan to Richmond, stretched along in single file and separated as the teams necessarily would be when moving, we could still carry only three days' forage and about ten to twelve days' rations, besides a supply of ammunition. To overcome all difficulties the chief quartermaster, General Rufus Ingalls, had marked on each wagon the corps badge with the division color and the number of the brigade. At a glance the particular brigade to which any wagon belonged could be told. The wagons were also marked to note the contents: if ammunition, whether for artillery or infantry; if forage, whether grain or hay; if rations, whether bread, pork, beans, rice, sugar, coffee, or whatever it might be. Empty wagons

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Col. R. L. Walker's Division</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cutt's Battalion.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richardson's Battalion.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>McIntosh's Battalion.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pegram's Battalion.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pegauce's Battalion.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

- Johnson's Battery.
- Hardaway Artillery.
- Danville.
- Second Rockbridge Artillery.
- Pee Dee Artillery.
- Fredericksburg Artillery.
- Letcher.
- Purcell Battery.
- Crenshaw's Battery.
- Madison Artillery.
- Albemarle.
- Brooke.
- Charlotte.
THE WILDERNESS.

From Surveys
under the direction of Bvt. Brig. Gen. N. Michler,
Maj. of Engineers,
By Command of
Bvt. Maj. Gen'l A. A. Humphreys,
Brig. Gen'l & Chief of Engineers.
1867.
were never allowed to follow the army or stay in camp. As soon as a wagon was empty it would return to the base of supply for a load of precisely the same article that had been taken from it. Empty trains were obliged to leave the road free for loaded ones. Arriving near the army, they would be parked in fields nearest to the brigades they belonged to. Issues, except of ammunition, were made at night in all cases. By this system the hauling of forage for the supply-trains was almost wholly dispensed with. They consumed theirs at the depots.

I left Culpeper Court House after all the troops had been put in motion, and passing rapidly to the front, crossed the Rapidan in advance of Sedgwick's corps, and established headquarters for the afternoon and night in a deserted house near the river.

Orders had been given, long before this movement began, to cut down the baggage of officers and men to the lowest point possible. Notwithstanding this I saw scattered along the road from Culpeper to Germanna Ford wagon-loads of new blankets and overcoats, thrown away by the troops to lighten their knapsacks—an improvidence I had never witnessed before.

Lee, while his pickets and signal corps must have discovered at a very early hour on the morning of the 4th of May that the Army of the Potomac was moving, evidently did not learn until about one o'clock in the afternoon by what route we would confront his army. This I judge from the fact that at 1:15 P.M., an hour and a quarter after Warren had reached Old Wilderness Tavern, our officers took off rebel signals which, when translated, were seen to be an order to his troops to occupy their intrenchments at Mine Run.

Here at night despatches were received announcing that Sherman, Butler, and Crook had moved according to programme.

On discovering the advance of the Army of the Potomac, Lee ordered Hill, Ewell, and Longstreet, each commanding corps, to move to the right to attack us, Hill on the Orange Plank Road, Longstreet to follow on the same road. Longstreet was at this time—middle of the afternoon—at Gordonsville, twenty or more miles away. Ewell was ordered by the Orange Pike. He was near by, and arrived some four miles east of Mine Run before bivouacking for the night.

My orders were given through General Meade for an early advance on the morning of the 5th. Warren was to move to Parker’s Store, and Wilson’s cavalry—then at Parker’s Store—to move on to Craig’s meeting-house. Sedgwick followed Warren, closing in on his right. The Army of the Potomac was facing to the west, though our advance was made to the south, except when facing the enemy. Hancock was to move southwestward to join on the left of Warren, his left to reach to Shady Grove Church.

At six o’clock, before reaching Parker’s Store, Warren discovered the enemy. He sent word back to this effect, and was ordered to halt and prepare to meet and attack him. Wright, with his division of Sedgwick’s corps, was ordered, by any road he could find, to join on to Warren’s right, and Getty, with his division, also of Sedgwick’s corps, was ordered to move rapidly by Warren’s rear and get on his left. This was the speediest way to reinforce Warren, who was confronting the enemy on both the Orange plank and turnpike roads.

Burnside had moved promptly on the 4th, on receiving word that the Army of the Potomac had safely crossed the Rapidan. By making a night-march, although some of his troops had to march forty miles to reach the river, he was crossing with the head of his column early on the morning of the 5th.

Meade moved his headquarters on to Old Wilderness Tavern, four miles south of the river, as soon as it was light enough to see the road. I remained to hasten Burnside's crossing and to put him in position. Burnside at this time was not under Meade's command, and was his senior in rank. Getting information of the proximity of the enemy, I informed Meade, and, without waiting to see Burnside, at once moved forward my headquarters to where Meade was.

It was my plan then, as it was on all other occasions, to take the initiative whenever the enemy could be drawn from his intrenchments, if we were not intrenched ourselves. Warren had not yet reached the point where he was to halt, when he discovered the enemy near by. Neither party had any advantage of position. Warren was therefore ordered to attack as soon as he could prepare for it. At nine o'clock Hancock was ordered to come up to the support of Getty. He himself arrived at Getty's front about noon, but his troops were yet far in the rear. Getty was directed to hold his position at all hazards until relieved. About this hour Warren was ready, and attacked with favorable though not decisive results. Getty was somewhat isolated from Warren and was in a precarious condition for a time. Wilson, with his division of cavalry, was farther south, and was cut off from the rest of the army. At two o'clock Hancock's troops began to arrive, and immediately he was ordered to join Getty and attack the enemy. But the heavy timber and narrow roads prevented him from getting into position for attack as promptly as he generally did when receiving such orders. At four o'clock he again received his orders to attack, and General Getty received orders from Meade a few minutes later to attack whether Hancock was ready or not. He met the enemy under Heth within a few hundred yards.

Hancock immediately sent two divisions, commanded by Birney and Mott, and later two brigades, Carroll's and Owen's, to the support of Getty. This was timely and saved Getty. During the battle Getty and Carroll were wounded, but remained on the field. One of Birney's most gallant brigade commanders—Alexander Hays—was killed.

I had been at West Point with Hays for three years, and had served with him through the Mexican war, a portion of the time in the same regiment. He was a most gallant officer, ready to lead his command wherever ordered. With him it was "Come, boys," not "Go."

Wadsworth's division and Baxter's brigade of the second division were sent to reinforce Hancock and Getty; but the density of the intervening forest was such that, there being no road to march upon, they did not get up with the head of column until night, and bivouacked where they were without getting into position.
During the afternoon Sheridan sent Gregg's division of cavalry to Todd's Tavern in search of Wilson. This was fortunate. He found Wilson engaged with a superior force under General Rosser, supported by infantry, and falling back before it. Together they were strong enough to turn the tables upon the enemy and themselves become aggressive. They soon drove the rebel cavalry back beyond Corbin's Bridge.

Fighting between Hancock and Hill continued until night put a close to it. Neither side made any special progress.

After the close of the battle of the 5th of May my orders were given for the following morning. We knew Longstreet with twelve thousand men was on his way to join Hill's right, near the Brock road, and might arrive during the night. I was anxious that the rebels should not take the initiative in the morning, and therefore ordered Hancock to make an assault at 4:30 o'clock. Meade asked to have the hour changed to six. Deferring to his wishes as far as I was willing, the order was modified and five was fixed as the hour to move.

Hancock had now fully one half of the Army of the Potomac. Wadsworth, with his division, which had arrived the night before, lay in a line perpendicular to that held by Hill, and to the right of Hancock. He was directed to move at the same time, and to attack Hill's left.

Burnside, who was coming up with two divisions, was directed to get in between Warren and Hancock, and attack as soon as he could get in position to do so. Sedgwick and Warren were to make attacks in their front, to detain as many of the enemy as they could, and to take advantage of any attempt to reinforce Hill from that quarter. Burnside was ordered, if he should succeed in breaking the enemy's center, to swing around to the left and envelop the right of Lee's army. Hancock was informed of all the movements ordered.

Burnside had three divisions; but one of them—a colored division—was sent to guard the wagon-train, and he did not see it again until July.

Lee was evidently very anxious that there should be no battle on his right until Longstreet got up. This is evident from the fact that notwithstanding the early hour at which I had ordered the assault, both for the purpose of being the attacking party and to strike before Longstreet got up, Lee was ahead in his assault on our right. His purpose was evident, but he failed.

Hancock was ready to advance by the hour named, but learning in time that Longstreet was moving a part of his corps by the Catharpin road, thus threatening his left flank, sent a division of infantry, commanded by General Barlow, with all his artillery, to cover the approaches by which Longstreet was expected. This disposition was made in time to attack as ordered. Hancock moved by the left of the Orange Plank Road, and Wadsworth by the right of it. The fighting was desperate for about an hour, when the enemy began to break up in great confusion.

I believed then, and see no reason to change that opinion now, that if the country had been such that Hancock and his command could have seen the confusion and panic in the lines of the enemy, it would have been taken advantage of so effectually that Lee would not have made another stand outside of his Richmond defenses.

Gibbon commanded Hancock's left, and was ordered to attack, but was not able to accomplish much.

On the morning of the 6th Sheridan was sent to connect with Hancock's left and attack the enemy's cavalry, who were trying to get on our left and rear. He met them at the intersection of the Furnace and Brock roads and at Todd's Tavern, and defeated them at both places. Later he was attacked, and again the enemy was repulsed.

Hancock heard the firing between Sheridan and Stuart, and thinking the enemy coming by that road, still further reinforced his position guarding the entrance to the Brock road. Another incident happened during the day to further induce Hancock to weaken his attacking column. Word reached him that troops were seen moving toward him from the direction of Todd's Tavern, and Brooke's brigade was detached to meet this new enemy; but the troops approaching proved to be several hundred convalescents coming from Chancellorsville, by the road Hancock had advanced upon, to join their respective commands. At 6:50 A.M., Burnside, who had passed Wilderness Tavern at six o'clock, was ordered to send a division to the support of Hancock, but to continue with the remainder of his command in the execution of his previous order. The difficulty of making a way through the dense forests prevented Burnside from getting up in time to be of any service on the forenoon of the 6th.

Hancock followed Hill's retreating forces, in the morning, a mile or more. He maintained this position until, along in the afternoon, Longstreet came upon him. The retreating column of Hill, meeting reinforcements that had not yet been engaged, became encouraged and returned with them. They were enabled, from the density of the forest, to approach within a few hundred yards of our advance before being discovered. Falling upon a brigade of Hancock's corps thrown to the advance, they swept it away almost instantly. The enemy followed up his advantage and soon came upon Mott's division, which fell back in great confusion. Hancock made dispositions to hold his advanced position, but after holding it for a time fell back into the position that he had held in the morning, which was strongly intrenched. In this engagement the intrepid Wadsworth, while trying to rally his men, was mortally wounded and fell into the hands of the enemy. The enemy followed up, but made no immediate attack.

The Confederate General Jenkins was killed and Longstreet seriously wounded in this engagement. Longstreet had to leave the field, not to resume command for many weeks. His loss was a severe one to Lee, and compensated in a great measure for the mishap, or misapprehensions, which had fallen to our lot during the day.

After Longstreet's removal from the field Lee took command of his right in person. He was not able, however, to rally his men to attack Hancock's position, and withdrew from our front for the purpose of reforming. Hancock sent a brigade to clear his front of all remnants that might be left of Longstreet's or Hill's commands. This brigade, having been formed at right angles to the intrenchments held by Hancock's command, swept down the whole length of them from left to right. A brigade of the enemy was encountered in this move; but it broke and disappeared without a contest.

Firing was continued after this, but with less fury. Burnside had not yet been able to get up to render any assistance; but it was now only about nine in the morning, and he was getting into position on Hancock's right.

At 4:15 in the afternoon Lee attacked our left. His line moved up to within a hundred yards of ours and opened a heavy fire. This status was maintained for about half an hour. Then a part of Mott's division and Ward's brigade of Birney's division gave way and retired in disorder. The enemy under R. H. Anderson took advantage of this and pushed through our line, planting their flags on a part of the intrenchments not on fire. But owing to the efforts of Hancock their success was but temporary. Carroll, of Gibbon's division, moved at a double-quick with his brigade and drove back the enemy, inflicting great loss. Fighting had continued from five in the morning sometimes along the whole line, at other times only in places. The ground fought over had varied in width, but averaged three quarters of a mile. The killed and many of the severely wounded of both armies lay within this belt, where it was impossible to reach them. The woods were set on fire by the bursting shells, and the conflagration raged. The wounded who had not strength to move themselves were either suffocated or burned to death. Finally the fire communicated with our breastworks in places. Being constructed of wood, they burned with great fury.

Vol. II.—8
But the battle still raged, our men firing through the flames until it became too hot to remain longer. Lee was now in distress. His men were in confusion, and his personal efforts failed to restore order. These facts, however, were learned subsequently, or we would have taken advantage of his condition and no doubt gained a decisive success. His troops were withdrawn now; but I revoked the order, which I had given previously to this assault, for Hancock to attack, because his troops had exhausted their ammunition and did not have time to replenish from the train, which was at some distance.

Burnside, Sedgwick, and Warren had all kept up an assault during all this time; but their efforts had no other effect than to prevent the enemy from reinforcing his right from the troops in their front.

I had, on the 5th, ordered all the bridges over the Rapidan to be taken up, except one at Germanna Ford.

The troops on Sedgwick's right had been sent to reinforce our left. This left our right in danger of being turned, and us of being cut off from all present base of supplies. Sedgwick had refused his right and intrenched it for protection against attack. But late in the afternoon of the 6th Early came out from his lines in considerable force and got in upon Sedgwick's right, notwithstanding the precautions taken, and created considerable confusion. Early captured several hundred prisoners, among them two general officers. The defense, however, was vigorous; and night coming on, the enemy was thrown into as much confusion as our troops, engaged, were. Early says in his "Memoirs" that if we had discovered the confusion in his lines we might have brought fresh troops to his great discomfort. Many officers who had not been attacked by Early continued coming to my headquarters even after Sedgwick had rectified his lines a little farther to the rear, with news of the disaster, fully impressed with the idea that the enemy was pushing on and would soon be upon me.

During the night all of Lee's army withdrew within their intrenchments. On the morning of the 7th General Custer drove the enemy's cavalry from Catharpin Furnace to Todd's Tavern. Pickets and skirmishers were sent along our entire front to find the position of the enemy. Some went as far as a mile and a half before finding him. But Lee showed no disposition to come out of his works. There was no battle during the day, and but little firing except in Warren's front, he being directed about noon to make a reconnaissance in force. This drew some sharp firing, but there was no attempt on the part of Lee to drive him back. This ended the battle of the Wilderness.
CHAPTER IX

AFTER THE BATTLE—TELEGRAPH AND SIGNAL SERVICE—MOVEMENT BY THE LEFT FLANK

MORE desperate fighting has not been witnessed on this continent than that of the 5th and 6th of May. Our victory consisted in having successfully crossed a formidable stream, almost in the face of an enemy, and in getting the army together as a unit. We gained an advantage on the morning of the 6th which, if it had been followed up, must have proven very decisive. In the evening the enemy gained an advantage, but was speedily repulsed. As we stood at the close the two armies were relatively in about the same condition to meet each other as when the river divided them. But the fact of having safely crossed was a victory.

Our losses in the Wilderness were very severe. Those of the Confederates must have been even more so; but I have no means of speaking with accuracy upon this point. The Germanna Ford bridge was transferred to Ely's Ford to facilitate the transportation of the wounded to Washington.

It may be as well here as elsewhere to state two things connected with all movements of the Army of the Potomac. First, in every change of position or halt for the night, whether confronting the enemy... or not, the moment arms were stacked the men intrenched themselves. For this purpose they would build up piles of logs or rails if they could be found in their front, and dig a ditch, throwing the dirt forward on the timber. Thus the digging they did counted in making a depression to stand in, and increased the elevation in front of them. It was wonderful how quickly they could in this way construct defenses of considerable strength. When a halt was made with the view of assaulting the enemy, or in his presence, these would be strengthened or their positions changed under the direction of engineer officers. The second was the use made of the telegraph and signal corps. Nothing could be more complete than the organization and discipline of this body of brave and intelligent men. Insulated wires—insulated so that they would transmit messages in a storm, on the ground or under water—were wound upon reels, making about two hundred pounds' weight of wire to each reel. Two men and one mule were detailed to each reel. The pack-saddle on which this was carried was provided with a rack like a sawbuck placed crosswise of the saddle, and raised above it so that the reel, with its wire, would revolve freely. There was a wagon supplied with a telegraph-operator, battery, and telegraph instruments for each division, each corps, each army, and one for my headquarters. There were wagons also loaded with light poles, about the size and length of a wall-tent pole, supplied with an iron spike in one end, used to hold the wires up when laid, so that wagons and artillery would not run over them. The mules thus loaded were assigned to brigades, and always kept with the command they were assigned to. The operators were also assigned to particular headquarters, and never changed except by special orders.

The moment the troops were put in position to go into camp all the men connected with this branch of service would proceed to put up their wires. A mule loaded with a coil of wire would be led to the rear of the nearest flank of the brigade he belonged to, and would be led in a line parallel thereto, while one man would hold an end of the wire and uncoil it as the mule was led off. When he had walked the length of the wire the whole of it would be on the ground. This would be done in rear of every brigade at the same time. The ends of all the wires would then be joined, making a continuous wire in the rear of the whole army. The men attached to brigades or divisions would all commence at once raising the wires with their telegraph-poles. This was done by making a loop in the wire and putting it over the spike and raising the pole to a perpendicular position. At intervals the wire would be attached to trees, or some other permanent object, so that one pole was sufficient at a place. In the absence of such a support two poles would have to be used, at intervals, placed at an angle so as to hold the wire firm in its place. While this was being done the telegraph-wagons would take their positions near where the headquarters they belonged to were to be established, and would connect with the wire. Thus, in a few minutes' longer time than it took a mule to walk the length of its coil, telegraphic communication would be effected between all the headquarters of the army. No orders ever had to be given to establish the telegraph.
The signal service was used on the march. The men composing this corps were assigned to specified commands. When movements were made, they would go in advance, or on the flanks, and seize upon high points of ground giving a commanding view of the country if cleared, or would climb tall trees on the highest points if not cleared, and would denote, by signals, the positions of different parts of our own army, and often the movements of the enemy. They would also take off the signals of the enemy and transmit them. It would sometimes take too long a time to make translations of intercepted despatches for us to receive any benefit from them; but sometimes they gave useful information.

On the afternoon of the 7th I received news from Washington announcing that Sherman had probably attacked Johnston that day, and that Butler had reached City Point safely and taken it by surprise on the 5th. I had given orders for a movement by the left flank, fearing that Lee might move rapidly to Richmond to crush Butler before I could get there.

My order for this movement was as follows:

Headquarters Armies of the United States,

May 7, 1864, 6:30 a.m.

Major-General Meade,

Commanding Army of the Potomac:

Make all preparations during the day for a night-march to take position at Spottsylvania Court House with one army-corps, at Todd's Tavern with one, and another near the intersection of the Piney Branch and Spottsylvania road with the road from Alsop's to Old Court House. If this move is made the trains should be thrown forward early in the morning to the Ny River.
I think it would be advisable in making the change to leave Hancock where he is until Warren passes him. He could then follow and become the right of the new line. Burnside will move to Piney Branch Church. Sedgwick can move along the pike to Chancellorsville and on to his destination. Burnside will move on the plank road to the intersection of it with the Orange and Fredericksburg plank road, then follow Sedgwick to his place of destination.

All vehicles should be got out of hearing of the enemy before the troops move, and then move off quietly.

It is more than probable that the enemy concentrate for a heavy attack on Hancock this afternoon. In case they do we must be prepared to resist them, and follow up any success we may gain with our whole force. Such a result would necessarily modify these instructions.

All the hospitals should be moved to-day to Chancellorsville.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

During the 7th Sheridan had a fight with the rebel cavalry at Todd's Tavern, but routed them, thus opening the way for the troops that were to go by that route at night. Soon after dark Warren withdrew from the front of the enemy, and was soon followed by Sedgwick. Warren's march carried him immediately behind the works where Hancock's command lay on the Brock road. With my staff and a small escort of cavalry I preceded the troops. Meade with his staff accompanied me. The greatest enthusiasm was manifested by Hancock's men as we passed by. No doubt it was inspired by the fact that the movement was south. It indicated to them that they had passed through the "beginning of the end" in the battle just fought. The cheering was so lusty that the enemy must have taken it for a night-attack. At all events, it drew from him
COUNTRY BETWEEN THE WILDERNESS AND SPOTTSYLVANIA COURT HOUSE.

National Forces.
Confederate Forces.
a furious fusillade of artillery and musketry, plainly heard, but not felt, by us.

Meade and I rode in advance. We had passed but a little way beyond our left when the road forked. We looked to see, if we could, which road Sheridan had taken with his cavalry during the day. It seemed to be the right-hand one, and accordingly we took it. We had not gone far, however, when Colonel C. B. Comstock, of my staff, with the instinct of the engineer, suspecting that we were on a road that would lead us into the lines of the enemy if he, too, should be moving, dashed by at a rapid gallop and all alone. In a few minutes he returned and reported that Lee was moving, and that the road we were on would bring us into his lines in a short distance. We returned to the forks of the road, left a man to indicate the right road to the head of Warren's column when it should come up, and continued our journey to Todd's Tavern, where we arrived after midnight.

My object in moving to Spottsylvania was twofold: first, I did not want Lee to get back to Richmond in time to attempt to crush Butler before I could get there; second, I wanted to get between his army and Richmond, if possible; and if not, to draw him into the open field. But Lee, by accident, beat us to Spottsylvania. Our wagon-trains had been ordered easterly of the roads the troops were to march upon before the movement commenced. Lee interpreted this as a semi-retreat of the Army of the Potomac to Fredericksburg, and so informed his government. Accordingly he ordered Longstreet's corps—now commanded by Anderson—to move in the morning (the 8th) to Spottsyl-
But the woods being still on fire, Anderson could not go into bivouac, and marched directly on to his destination that night. By this accident Lee got possession of Spotsylvania. It is impossible to say now what would have been the result if Lee's orders had been obeyed as given; but it is certain that we would have been in Spotsylvania and between him and his capital. My belief is that there would have been a race between the two armies to see which could reach Richmond first, and the Army of the Potomac would have had the shorter line. Thus twice since crossing the Rapidan we came near closing the campaign, so far as battles were concerned, from the Rapidan to the James River or Richmond. The first failure was caused by our not following up the success gained over Hill's corps on the morning of the 6th, as before described; the second, when fires caused by that battle drove Anderson to make a march during the night of the 7th-8th which he was ordered to commence on the morning of the 8th. But accident often decides the fate of battle.

Sheridan's cavalry had had considerable fighting during the afternoon of the 7th, lasting at Todd's Tavern until after night, with the field his at the close. He issued the necessary orders for seizing Spotsylvania and holding the bridge over the Po River, which Lee's troops would have to cross to get to Spotsylvania. But Meade changed Sheridan's orders to Merritt—who was holding the bridge—on his arrival at Todd's Tavern, and thereby left the road free for Anderson when he came up. Wilson, who was ordered to seize the town, did so with his division of cavalry; but he could not hold it against the Confederate corps, which had not been detained at the crossing of the Po, as it would have been but for the unfortunate change in Merritt's orders. Had he been permitted to execute the orders Sheridan gave him, he would have been guarding with two brigades of cavalry the bridge over the Po River which Anderson had to cross, and must have detained him long enough to enable Warren to reinforce Wilson and hold the town.

Anderson soon intrenched himself—if, indeed, the intrenchments were not already made—immediately across Warren's front. Warren was not aware of his presence, but probably supposed it was the cavalry which Merritt had engaged earlier in the day. He assaulted at once, but was repulsed. He soon organized his men, as they were not pursued by the enemy, and made a second attack, this time with his whole corps. This time he succeeded in gaining a position immediately in the enemy's front, where he intrenched. His right and left divisions—the former Crawford's, the latter Wadsworth's, now commanded by Cutler—drove the enemy back some distance.

At this time my headquarters had been advanced to Piney Branch Church. I was anxious to crush Anderson before Lee could get a force to his support. To this end Sedgwick, who was at Piney Branch Church, was ordered to Warren's support. Hancock, who was at Todd's Tavern, was notified of Warren's engagement, and was directed to be in readiness to come up. Burnside, who was with the wagon-trains at Aldrich's on our extreme left, received the same instructions. Sedgwick was slow in getting up for some reason,—probably unavoidable, because he was never at fault when serious work was to be done,—so that it was near night before the combined forces were ready to attack. Even then all of Sedgwick's command did not get into the engagement. Warren led the last assault, one division at a time, and of course it failed.

Warren's difficulty was twofold. When he received an order to do anything it would at once occur to his mind how all the balance of the army should be engaged so as properly to coöperate with him. His ideas were generally good, but he would forget that the person giving him orders had thought of others at the time he had of him. In like manner, when he did get ready to execute an order, after giving most intelligent instructions to division commanders, he would go in with one division, holding the others in reserve until he could superintend their movements in person also, forgetting that division commanders could execute an order without his presence. His difficulty was constitutional and beyond his control. He was an officer of superior ability, quick perceptions, and personal courage to accomplish anything that could be done with a small command.

Lee had ordered Hill's corps—now commanded by Early—to move by the very road we had marched upon. This shows that even early in the morning of the 8th Lee had not yet become acquainted with my move, but still thought that the Army of the Potomac had gone to Fredericksburg. Indeed, he informed the authorities at Richmond that he had possession of Spottsylvania and was thus on my flank. Anderson was in possession of Spottsylvania, through no foresight of Lee, however. Early only found that he had been following us when he ran against Hancock at Todd's Tavern. His coming detained Hancock from the battle-field of Spottsylvania for that day; but he, in like manner, kept Early back and forced him to move by another route.

Had I ordered the movement for the night of the 7th by my left flank, it would have put Hancock in the lead. It would also have given us an hour or more earlier start. It took all that time for Warren to get the head of his column to the left of Hancock after he had got his troops out of their line confronting the enemy. This hour, and Hancock's capacity to use his whole force when necessary, would no doubt have enabled him to crush Anderson before he could be reinforced. But the movement made was tactical. It kept the troops in mass against a possible assault by the enemy. Our left occupied its intrenchments while the two corps to the right passed. If an attack had been made by the enemy he would have found the Second Corps in position, fortified, and, practically, the Fifth and Sixth corps in position as reserves, until his entire front was passed. By a left flank movement the army would have been scattered while still passing the front of the enemy, and before the extreme right had got by it would have been very much exposed. Then, too, I had not yet learned the special qualifications of the different corps commanders. At that time my judgment was that Warren was the man I would suggest to succeed Meade should anything happen to that gallant soldier to take him from the field. As I have before said, Warren was a gallant soldier, an able man; and he was besides thoroughly imbued with the solemnity and importance of the duty he had to perform.
CHAPTER X

BATTLE OF SPOTTSYLVANIA—HANCOCK'S POSITION—ASSAULT OF WARREN'S AND WRIGHT'S CORPS—UPTON PROMOTED ON THE FIELD—GOOD NEWS FROM BUTLER AND SHERIDAN

THE Mattapony River is formed by the junction of the Mat, the Ta, the Po, and the Ny rivers, the last being the northernmost of the four. It takes its rise about a mile south and a little east of the Wilderness Tavern. The Po rises southwest of the same place, but farther away. Spottsylvania is on the ridge dividing these two streams, and where they are but a few miles apart. The Brock road reaches Spottsylvania without crossing either of these streams. Lee's army, coming up by the Catharpin road, had to cross the Po at Wooden Bridge. Warren and Hancock came by the Brock road. Sedgwick crossed the Ny at Catharpin Furnace. Burnside, coming by Aldrich's to Gates's House, had to cross the Ny near the enemy. He found pickets at the bridge; but they were soon driven off by a brigade of Willeox's division, and the stream was crossed. This brigade was furiously attacked; but the remainder of the division coming up, they were enabled to hold their position, and soon fortified it.
About the time I received the news of this attack, word came from Hancock that Early had left his front. He had been forced over to the Catharpin road, crossing the Po at Corbin's and again at Wooden Bridge. These are the bridges Sheridan had given orders to his cavalry to occupy on the 8th, while one division should occupy Spottsylvania. These movements of the enemy gave me the idea that Lee was about to make the attempt to get to, or toward, Fredericksburg to cut off my supplies. I made arrangements to attack his right and get between him and Richmond if he should try to execute this design. If he had any such intention it was abandoned as soon as Burnside was established south of the Ny.

The Po and the Ny are narrow little streams, but deep, with abrupt banks, and bordered by heavily wooded and marshy bottoms,—at the time we were there,—and difficult to cross except where bridged. The country about was generally heavily timbered, but with occasional clearings. It was a much better country to conduct a defensive campaign in than an offensive one.

By noon of the 9th the position of the two armies was as follows: Lee occupied a semicircle facing north, northwest, and northeast, inclosing the town. Anderson was on his left extending to the Po, Ewell came next, then Early. Warren occupied our right, covering the Brock and other roads converging at Spottsylvania; Sedgwick was to his left and Burnside on our extreme left. Hancock was yet back at Todd's Tavern, but as soon as it was known that Early had left Hancock's front the latter was ordered up to Warren's right. He formed a line with three divisions on the hill overlooking the Po early in the afternoon, and was ordered to cross the Po and get on the enemy’s flank. The fourth division of Hancock’s corps, Mott commanding, was left at Todd’s when the corps first came up; but in the afternoon it was brought up and placed to the left of Sedgwick’s—now Wright’s—Sixth Corps. In the morning General Sedgwick had been killed near the right of his intrenchments by rebel sharpshooters. His loss was a severe one to the Army of the Potomac and to the nation. General H. G. Wright succeeded him in the command of his corps.

Hancock was now, 9 p.m. of the 9th of May, across the left flank of Lee’s army, but separated from it, and also from the remainder of Meade’s army, by the Po River. But for the lateness of the hour and the darkness of the night he would have attempted to cross the river again at Wooden Bridge, thus bringing himself on the same side with both friend and foe.

The Po at the points where Hancock’s corps crossed runs nearly due east. Just below his lower crossing—the troops crossed at three points—it turns due south, and after passing under Wooden Bridge soon resumes a more easterly direction. During the night this corps built three bridges over the Po; but these were in rear.

The position assumed by Hancock’s corps forced Lee to reinforce his left during the night. Accordingly on the morning of the 10th, when Hancock renewed his effort to get over the Po to his front, he found himself confronted by some of Early’s command, which had been brought from the extreme right of the enemy during the night. He succeeded in effecting a crossing with one brigade, however, but finding the enemy intrenched in his front, no more were crossed.

Hancock reconnoitered his front on the morning of the 10th, with the view of forcing a crossing if it were found that an advantage could be gained. The enemy was found strongly intrenched on the high ground overlooking the river, and commanding the Wooden Bridge with artillery. Anderson's left rested on the Po, where it turns south; therefore for Hancock to cross over—although it would bring him to the same side of the stream with the rest of the army—would still further isolate him from it. The stream would have to be crossed twice in the face of the enemy to unite with the main body. The idea of crossing was therefore abandoned.

Lee had weakened the other parts of his line to meet this movement of Hancock's, and I determined to take advantage of it. Accordingly in the morning orders were issued for an attack in the afternoon on the center by Warren's and Wright's corps, Hancock to command all the attacking force. Two of his divisions were brought to the north side of the Po. Gibbon was placed to the right of Warren, and Birney in his rear as a reserve. Barlow's division was left south of the stream, and Mott, of the same corps, was still to the left of Wright's corps. Burnside was ordered to reconnoiter his front in force, and, if an opportunity presented, to attack with vigor. The enemy, seeing Barlow's division isolated from the rest of the army, came out and attacked with fury. Barlow repulsed the assault with great slaughter and with considerable loss to himself. But the enemy reorganized and renewed the assault. Birney was now moved to the high ground overlooking the river crossings built by our troops, and covered the crossings. The second assault was repulsed, again with severe loss to the enemy, and Barlow was withdrawn without further molestation. General T. G. Stevenson was killed in this move.

Between the lines, where Warren’s assault was to take place, there was a ravine grown up with large trees and underbrush, making it almost impregnable by man. The slopes on both sides were also covered with a heavy growth of timber. Warren, before noon, reconnoitered his front twice, the first time with one and the second with two divisions. He was repulsed on both occasions, but gained such information of the ground as to induce him to report recommending the assault.

Wright also reconnoitered his front and gained a considerably advanced position from the one he started from. He then organized a storming party, consisting of twelve regiments, and assigned Colonel Emory Upton, of the One Hundred and Twenty-first New York Volunteers, to the command of it. About four o’clock in the afternoon the assault was ordered, Warren’s and Wright’s corps, with Mott’s division of Hancock’s corps, to move simultaneously. The movement was prompt, and in a few minutes the fiercest of struggles began. The battlefield was so densely covered with forests that but little could be seen, by any one person, as to the progress made. Meade and I occupied the best position we could get, in rear of Warren.

Warren was repulsed with heavy loss, General J. C. Rice being among the killed. He was not followed, however, by the enemy, and was thereby enabled to reorganize his command as soon as covered from the guns of the enemy. To the left our success was decided, but the advantage was lost by the feeble action of Mott. Upton with his assaulting party pushed forward and crossed the enemy’s intrenchments. Turning to the right and left, he captured several guns and some hundreds of prisoners. Mott was ordered to his assistance, but failed utterly. So much time was lost in trying to get up the troops which were in the right position to reinforce that I ordered Upton to withdraw; but the officers and men of his command were so averse to giving up the advantage they had gained that I withdrew the order. To relieve them I ordered a renewal of the assault. By this time Hancock, who had gone with Birney’s division to relieve Barlow, had returned, bringing the division with him. His corps was now joined with Warren’s and Wright’s in this last assault. It was gallantly made, many men getting up to, and over, the works of the enemy; but they were not able to hold them. At night they were withdrawn. Upton brought his prisoners with him, but the guns he had captured he was obliged to abandon. Upton had gained an important advantage, but a lack in others of the spirit and dash possessed by him lost it to us. Before leaving Washington I had been authorized to promote officers on the field for special acts of gallantry. By this authority I conferred the rank of brigadier-general upon Upton on the spot, and this act was confirmed by the President. Upton had been badly wounded in this fight.

Burnside on the left had got up to within a few hundred yards of Spottsylvania Court House, completely turning Lee's right. He was not aware of the importance of the advantage he had gained, and I, being with the troops where the heavy fighting was, did not know of it at the time. He had gained his position with but little fighting, and almost without loss. Burnside's position now separated him widely from Wright's corps, the corps nearest to him. At night he was ordered to join on to this. This brought him back about a mile, and lost to us an important advantage. I attach no blame to Burnside for this, but I do to myself for not having had a staff-officer with him to report to me his position.

The enemy had not dared to come out of his line at any point to follow up his advantage, except in the single instance of his attack on Barlow. Then he was twice repulsed with heavy loss, though he had an entire corps against two brigades. Barlow took up his bridges in the presence of this force.

On the 11th there was no battle and but little firing; none except by Mott, who made a reconnaissance to ascertain if there were a weak point in the enemy's line.

I wrote the following letter to General Halleck:

Near Spottsylvania Court House,
May 11, 1864, 8:30 A.M.

Major-General Halleck, Chief of Staff of the Army,
Washington, D. C.:

We have now ended the sixth day of very hard fighting. The result up to this time is much in our favor. But our losses have been heavy as well as those of the enemy. We have lost to this time eleven general officers killed, wounded, and missing, and probably twenty thousand men. I think the loss of the enemy must be greater—we having taken over four thousand prisoners in battle, whilst he has taken from us but few except a few stragglers. I am now sending back to Belle Plain all my wagons for a fresh supply of provisions and ammunition, and purpose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer.

The arrival of reinforcements here will be very encouraging to the men, and I hope they will be sent as fast as possible, and in as great numbers. My object in having them sent to Belle Plain was to use them as an escort to our supply-trains. If it is more convenient to send them out by train, to march from the railroad to Belle Plain or Fredericksburg, send them so.

I am satisfied the enemy are very shaky, and are only kept up to the mark by the greatest exertions on the part of their officers, and by keeping them intrenched in every position they take.

Up to this time there is no indication of any portion of Lee's army being detached for the defense of Richmond.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

And, also, I received information, through the War Department, from General Butler that his cavalry under Kautz had cut the railroad south of Petersburg, separating Beauregard from Richmond, and had whipped Hill, killing, wounding, and capturing many; also that he was intrenched and could maintain himself. On this same day came news from Sheridan to the effect that he had destroyed ten miles of the railroad and telegraph between Lee and Richmond, one and a half million rations, and most of the medical stores for his army.

On the 8th I had directed Sheridan verbally to cut loose from the Army of the Potomac and pass around the left of Lee's army and attack his cavalry and communications, which was successfully executed in the manner I have already described.
CHAPTER XI

HANCOCK'S ASSAULT—LOSSES OF THE CONFEDERATES
—PROMOTIONS RECOMMENDED—DISCOMFITURE OF THE ENEMY—EWELL'S ATTACK—REDUCING THE ARTILLERY

IN the reconnaissance made by Mott on the 11th a salient was discovered at the right center.
I determined that an assault should be made at that point. Accordingly in the afternoon Hancock was ordered to move his command by the rear of Warren and Wright, under cover of night, to Wright's left, and there form it for an assault at four o'clock the next morning. The night was dark, it rained heavily, and the road was difficult, so that it was midnight when he reached the point where

1 HEADQUARTERS ARMIES U. S.,
May 11, 1864, 3 P.M.

MAJOR-GENERAL MEADE,
Commanding Army of the Potomac:

Move three divisions of the Second Corps by the rear of the Fifth and Sixth corps, under cover of night, so as to join the Ninth Corps in a vigorous assault on the enemy at 4 o'clock A.M. to-morrow. I will send one or two staff-officers over to-night to stay with Burnside, and impress him with the importance of a prompt and vigorous attack. Warren and Wright should hold their corps as close to the enemy as possible, to take advantage of any diversion caused by this attack, and to push in if any opportunity presents itself. There is but little doubt in my mind that the assault last evening would have proved entirely successful if it had commenced one hour earlier and had been heartily entered into by Mott's division and the Ninth Corps.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.
he was to halt. It took most of the night to get the men in position for their advance in the morning. The men got but little rest. Burnside was ordered to attack¹ on the left of the salient at the same hour. I sent two of my staff-officers to impress upon him the importance of pushing forward vigorously. Hancock was notified of this. Warren and Wright were ordered to hold themselves in readiness to join in the assault if circumstances made it advisable. I occupied a central position most convenient for receiving information from all points. Hancock put Barlow on his left, in double column, and Birney to his right. Mott followed Birney, and Gibbon was held in reserve.

The morning of the 12th opened foggy, delaying the start more than half an hour.

The ground over which Hancock had to pass to reach the enemy was ascending and heavily wooded to within two or three hundred yards of the enemy's intrenchments. In front of Birney there was also a marsh to cross. But notwithstanding all these ¹ Headquarters Armies U. S., May 11, 1864, 4 p.m.

Major-General A. E. Burnside, Commanding Ninth Army-corps:

Major-General Hancock has been ordered to move his corps under cover of night to join you in a vigorous attack against the enemy at 4 o'clock A.M. to-morrow. You will move against the enemy with your entire force promptly and with all possible vigor at precisely 4 o'clock A.M. to-morrow, the 12th inst. Let your preparations for this attack be conducted with the utmost secrecy and veiled entirely from the enemy.

I send two of my staff-officers—Colonels Comstock and Babcock, in whom I have great confidence, and who are acquainted with the direction the attack is to be made from here—to remain with you and General Hancock, with instructions to render you every assistance in their power. Generals Warren and Wright will hold their corps as close to the enemy as possible, to take advantage of any diversion caused by yours and Hancock's attack, and will push in their whole force if any opportunity presents itself.

U. S. Grant, Lieutenant-General.
difficulties the troops pushed on in quick time without firing a gun, and when within four or five hundred yards of the enemy's line broke out in loud cheers, and with a rush went up to and over the breastworks. Barlow and Birney entered almost simultaneously. Here a desperate hand-to-hand conflict took place. The men of the two sides were too close together to fire, but used their guns as clubs. The hand-conflict was soon over. Hancock's corps captured some four thousand prisoners,—among them a division and a brigade commander,—twenty or more guns with their horses, caissons, and ammunition, several thousand stand of arms, and many colors. Hancock, as soon as the hand-to-hand conflict was over, turned the guns of the enemy against him and advanced inside the rebel lines. About six o'clock I ordered Warren's corps to the support of Hancock's. Burnside, on the left, had advanced up east of the salient to the very parapet of the enemy. Potter, commanding one of his divisions, got over, but was not able to remain there. However, he inflicted a heavy loss upon the enemy, but not without loss in return.

This victory was important, and one that Lee could not afford to leave us in full possession of. He made the most strenuous efforts to regain the position he had lost. Troops were brought up from his left and attacked Hancock furiously. Hancock was forced to fall back; but he did so slowly, with his face to the enemy, inflicting on him heavy loss, until behind the breastworks he had captured. These he turned, facing them the other way, and continued to hold. Wright was ordered up to reinforce Hancock, and arrived by six o'clock. He was wounded soon after coming up, but did not relinquish the command of his corps, although the fighting lasted until one o'clock the next morning. At eight o'clock Warren was ordered up again, but was so slow in making his dispositions that his orders were frequently repeated, and with emphasis. At eleven o'clock I gave Meade written orders to relieve Warren from his command if he failed to move promptly. Hancock placed batteries on high ground in his rear, which he used against the enemy, firing over the heads of his own troops.
This fold-out is being digitized, and will be inserted at a future date.

Burnside accomplished but little on our left of a positive nature, but negatively a great deal. He kept Lee from reinforcing his center from that quarter. If the Fifth Corps, or rather if Warren, had been as prompt as Wright was with the Sixth Corps, better results might have been obtained.

Lee massed heavily from his left flank on the broken point of his line. Five times during the day he assaulted furiously, but without dislodging our troops from their new position. His losses must have been fearful. Sometimes the belligerents would be separated by but a few feet. In one place a tree, eighteen inches in diameter, was cut entirely down by musket-balls. All the trees between the lines were very much cut to pieces by artillery and musketry. It was three o'clock next morning before the fighting ceased. Some of our troops had then been twenty hours under fire. In this engagement we did not lose a single organization, not even a company. The enemy lost one division with its commander, one brigade, and one regiment, with heavy losses elsewhere.¹ Our losses were heavy, but, as stated, no whole company was captured. At night Lee took a position in rear of his former one, and by the following morning he was strongly intrenched in it.

Warren's corps was now temporarily broken up, Cutler's division sent to Wright, and Griffin's to Hancock. Meade ordered his chief of staff, General Humphreys, to remain with Warren and the remaining division, and authorized him to give it orders in his name.

During the day I was passing along the line from wing to wing continuously. About the center stood a house which proved to be occupied by an old lady and her daughter. She showed such unmistakable signs of being strongly Union that I stopped. She said she had not seen a Union flag for so long a time that it did her heart good to look upon it again. She said her husband and son, being Union men, had had to leave early in the war, and were now somewhere in the Union army, if alive. She was without food or nearly so, so I ordered rations issued to her, and promised to find out, if I could, where the husband and son were.

There was no fighting on the 13th, further than a little skirmishing between Mott's division and the

¹ Headquarters Armies U. S.,
May 12, 1864, 6:30 p.m.
Major-General Halleck,
Washington, D. C.:
The eighth day of the battle closes, leaving between three and four thousand prisoners in our hands for the day's work, including two general officers, and over thirty pieces of artillery. The enemy are obstinate, and seem to have found the last ditch. We have lost no organizations,—not even that of a company,—whilst we have destroyed and captured one division (Johnson's), one brigade (Doles's), and one regiment entire from the enemy.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
enemy. I was afraid that Lee might be moving out, and I did not want him to go without my knowing it. The indications were that he was moving, but it was found that he was only taking his new position back from the salient that had been captured. Our dead were buried this day. Mott's division was reduced to a brigade and assigned to Birney's division.

During this day I wrote to Washington recommending Sherman and Meade\(^1\) for promotion to the grade of major-general in the regular army; Hancock for brigadier-general; Wright, Gibbon, and Humphreys to be major-generals of volunteers; and Upton and Carroll to be brigadiers. Upton had already been named as such, but the appointment had to be confirmed by the Senate on the nomination of the President.

---

\(^{1}\)Spotsylvania Court House, May 13, 1864.
Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War.
Washington, D. C.:

I beg leave to recommend the following promotions to be made for gallant and distinguished services in the last eight days' battles, to wit: Brigadier-General H. G. Wright and Brigadier-General John Gibbon to be major-generals; Colonel S. S. Carroll, Eighth Ohio Volunteers; Colonel E. Upton, One Hundred and Twenty-first New York Volunteers; Colonel William McCandless, Second Pennsylvania Reserves, to be brigadier-generals. I would also recommend Major-General W. S. Hanneock for brigadier-general in the regular army. His services and qualifications are eminently deserving of this recognition. In making these recommendations I do not wish the claims of General G. M. Dodge for promotion forgotten, but recommend his name to be sent in at the same time. I would also ask to have General Wright assigned to the command of the Sixth Army-corps. I would further ask the confirmation of General Humphreys to the rank of major-general.

General Meade has more than met my most sanguine expectations. He and Sherman are the fittest officers for large commands I have come in contact with. If their services can be rewarded by promotion to the rank of major-generals in the regular army the honor would be worthily bestowed, and I would feel personally gratified. I would not like to see one of these promotions at this time without seeing both.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
The night of the 13th Warren and Wright were moved by the rear to the left of Burnside. The night was very dark and it rained heavily; the roads were so bad that the troops had to cut trees and corduroy the road a part of the way to get through. It was midnight before they got to the point where they were to halt, and daylight before the troops could be organized to advance to their position in line. They gained their position in line, however, without any fighting, except a little in Wright's front. Here Upton had to contend for an elevation which we wanted and which the enemy was not disposed to yield. Upton first drove the enemy, and was then repulsed in turn. Ayres coming to his support with his brigade (of Griffin's division, Warren's corps), the position was secured and fortified. There was no more battle during the 14th. This brought our line east of the Court House and running north and south and facing west.

During the night of the 14th-15th Lee moved to cover this new front. This left Hancock without an enemy confronting him. He was brought to the rear of our new center, ready to be moved in any direction he might be wanted.

On the 15th news came from Butler and Averell. The former reported the capture of the outer works at Drury's Bluff, on the James River, and that his cavalry had cut the railroad and telegraph south of Richmond on the Danville road; and the latter, the destruction of a depot of supplies at Dublin, West Virginia, and the breaking of New River Bridge on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad. The next day news came from Sherman and Sheridan. Sherman had forced Johnston out of Dalton, Georgia, and was following him south. The report from Sheridan embraced his operations up to his passing the outer defenses of Richmond. The prospect must now have been dismal in Richmond. The road and telegraph were cut between the capital and Lee. The roads and wires were cut in every direction from the rebel capital. Temporarily that city was cut off from all communication with the outside except by courier. This condition of affairs, however, was of but short duration.

I wrote Halleck:

Near Spottsylvania Court House,

May 16, 1864, 8 a.m.

Major-General Halleck,

Washington, D. C.:

We have had five days' almost constant rain without any prospect yet of its clearing up. The roads have now become so impassable that ambulances with wounded men can no longer run between here and Fredericksburg. All offensive operations necessarily cease until we can have twenty-four hours of dry weather. The army is in the best of spirits, and feels the greatest confidence of ultimate success.

* * * * * * * * *

You can assure the President and Secretary of War that the elements alone have suspended hostilities, and that it is in no manner due to weakness or exhaustion on our part.

U. S. Grant,

Lieutenant-General.

The condition of the roads was such that nothing was done on the 17th. But that night Hancock and Wright were to make a night-march back to their old positions, and to make an assault at four o'clock in the morning. Lee got troops back in time to protect his old line, so the assault was unsucces-
ful. On this day (18th) the news was almost as discouraging to us as it had been two days before in the rebel capital. As stated above, Hancock’s and Wright’s corps had made an unsuccessful assault. News came that Sigel had been defeated at New Market badly, and was retreating down the valley. Not two hours before I had sent the inquiry to Halleck whether Sigel could not get to Staunton to stop supplies coming from there to Lee. I asked at once that Sigel might be relieved and some one else put in his place. Hunter’s name was suggested, and I heartily approved. Further news from Butler reported him driven from Drury’s Bluff, but still in possession of the Petersburg road. Banks had been defeated in Louisiana, relieved, and Canby put in his place. This change of commander was not on my suggestion. All this news was very discouraging. All of it must have been known by the enemy before it was by me. In fact, the good news (for the enemy) must have been known to him at the moment I thought he was in despair, and his anguish had been already relieved when we were enjoying his supposed discomfiture. But this was no time for repining. I immediately gave orders for a movement by the left flank on toward Richmond, to commence on the night of the 19th. I also asked Halleck to secure the cooperation of the navy in changing our base of supplies from Fredericksburg to Port Royal, on the Rappahannock.

Up to this time I had received no reinforcements, except six thousand raw troops under Brigadier-General Robert O. Tyler, just arrived. They had not yet joined their command, Hancock’s corps, but were on our right. This corps had been brought to the rear of the center, ready to move in any direction. Lee, probably suspecting some move on my part, and seeing our right entirely abandoned, moved Ewell's corps about five o'clock in the afternoon, with Early's as a reserve, to attack us in that quarter. Tyler had come up from Fredericksburg, and had been halted on the road to the right of our line, near Kitching's brigade of Warren's corps. Tyler received the attack with his raw troops, and they maintained their position, until reinforced, in a manner worthy of veterans.

Hancock was in a position to reinforce speedily, and was the soldier to do it without waiting to make dispositions. Birney was thrown to Tyler's right and Crawford to his left, with Gibbon as a reserve; and Ewell was whirled back speedily and with heavy loss.

Warren had been ordered to get on Ewell's flank and in his rear, to cut him off from his intrenchments. But his efforts were so feeble that under the cover of night Ewell got back with only the loss of a few hundred prisoners, besides his killed and wounded. The army being engaged until after dark, I rescinded the order for the march by our left flank that night.

As soon as it was discovered that the enemy were coming out to attack, I naturally supposed they would detach a force to destroy our trains. The withdrawal of Hancock from the right uncovered one road from Spottsylvania to Fredericksburg over which trains drew our supplies. This was guarded by a division of colored troops, commanded by General Ferrero, belonging to Burnside's corps. Ferrero was therefore promptly notified, and ordered... to throw his cavalry pickets out to the south and be prepared to meet the enemy if he should come; if he had to retreat, to do so toward Fredericksburg. The enemy did detach as expected, and captured twenty-five or thirty wagons, which, however, were soon retaken.

In consequence of the disasters that had befallen us in the past few days Lee could be reinforced largely, and I had no doubt he would be. Beauregard had come up from the south with troops to guard the Confederate capital when it was in danger. Butler being driven back, most of the troops could be sent to Lee. Hoke was no longer needed in North Carolina; and Sigel's troops having gone back to Cedar Creek, whipped, many troops could be spared from the valley.

The Wilderness and Spottsylvania battles convinced me that we had more artillery than could ever be brought into action at any one time. It occupied much of the road in marching, and taxed the trains in bringing up forage. Artillery is very useful when it can be brought into action, but it is a very burdensome luxury where it cannot be used. Before leaving Spottsylvania, therefore, I sent back to the defenses of Washington over one hundred pieces of artillery, with the horses and caissons. This relieved the roads over which we were to march of more than two hundred six-horse teams, and still left us more artillery than could be advantageously used. In fact, before reaching the James River I again reduced the artillery with the army largely.

I believed that if one corps of the army was exposed on the road to Richmond, and at a distance from the main army, Lee would endeavor to attack the exposed corps before reinforcements could come up; in which case the main army could follow Lee up and attack him before he had time to intrench. So I issued the following orders:

Near Spottsylvania Court House, Virginia, May 18, 1864.

Major-General Meade,
Commanding Army of the Potomac:

Before daylight to-morrow morning I propose to draw Hancock and Burnside from the position they now hold, and put Burnside to the left of Wright. Wright and Burnside should then force their way up as close to the enemy as they can get without a general engagement, or with a general engagement if the enemy will come out of their works to fight and intrench. Hancock should march and take up a position as if in support of the two left corps. To-morrow night, at twelve or one o'clock, he will be moved southeast with all his force and as much cavalry as can be given to him, to get as far toward Richmond on the line of the Fredericksburg railroad as he can make, fighting the enemy in whatever force he can find him. If the enemy make a general move to meet this, they will be followed by the other three corps of the army, and attacked, if possible, before time is given to intrench.

Suitable directions will at once be given for all trains and surplus artillery to conform to this movement.

U. S. Grant.

On the 20th, Lee showing no signs of coming out of his lines, orders were renewed for a left-flank movement, to commence after night.
CHAPTER XII

MOVEMENT BY THE LEFT FLANK—BATTLE OF NORTH ANNA—AN INCIDENT OF THE MARCH—MOVING ON RICHMOND—SOUTH OF THE PAMUNKEY—POSITION OF THE NATIONAL ARMY

We were now to operate in a different country from any we had before seen in Virginia. The roads were wide and good and the country well cultivated. No men were seen except those bearing arms, even the black man having been sent away. The country, however, was new to us, and we had neither guides nor maps to tell us where the roads were or where they led to. Engineer and staff officers were put to the dangerous duty of supplying the place of both maps and guides. By reconnoitering they were enabled to locate the roads in the vicinity of each army-corps. Our course was south, and we took all roads leading in that direction which would not separate the army too widely.

Hancock, who had the lead, had marched easterly to Guinea's Station on the Fredericksburg railroad, thence southerly to Bowling Green and Milford. He was at Milford by the night of the 21st. Here he met a detachment of Pickett's division coming from Richmond to reinforce Lee. They were speedilly driven away and several hundred captured. Warren followed on the morning of the 21st, and reached Guiney's Station that night without molestation. Burnside and Wright were retained at Spottsylvania to keep up the appearance of an intended assault, and to hold Lee, if possible, while Hancock and Warren should get start enough to interpose between him and Richmond.

Lee had now a superb opportunity to take the initiative either by attacking Wright and Burnside alone, or by following by the Telegraph Road and striking Hancock's and Warren's corps, or even Hancock's alone, before reinforcements could come up. But he did not avail himself of either opportunity. He seemed really to be misled as to my designs; but moved by his interior line—the Telegraph Road—to make sure of keeping between his capital and the Army of the Potomac. He never again had such an opportunity of dealing a heavy blow.

The evening of the 21st, Burnside, Ninth Corps, moved out, followed by Wright, Sixth Corps. Burnside was to take the Telegraph Road; but finding Stanard's Ford, over the Po, fortified and guarded, he turned east to the road taken by Hancock and Warren, without an attempt to dislodge the enemy. The night of the 21st I had my headquarters near the Sixth Corps, at Guiney's Station, and the enemy's cavalry was between us and Hancock. There was a slight attack on Burnside's and Wright's corps as they moved out of their lines; but it was easily repulsed. The object, probably, was only to make sure that we were not leaving a force to follow upon the rear of the Confederates.
By the morning of the 22d Burnside and Wright were at Guiney's Station. Hancock's corps had now been marching and fighting continuously for several days, not having had rest even at night much of the time. They were therefore permitted to rest during the 22d. But Warren was pushed to Harris's Store, directly west of Milford, and connected with it by a good road, and Burnside was sent to New Bethel Church. Wright's corps was still back at Guiney's Station.

I issued the following order for the movement of the troops the next day:

New Bethel, Virginia,
May 22, 1864.

Major-General Meade,
Commanding Army of the Potomac:

Direct corps commanders to hold their troops in readiness to march at 5 A.M. to-morrow. At that hour each command will send out cavalry and infantry on all roads to their front leading south, and ascertain, if possible, where the enemy is. If beyond the South Anna, the Fifth and Sixth corps will march to the forks of the road, where one branch leads to Beaver Dam Station, the other to Jericho Bridge, then south by roads reaching the Anna, as near to and east of Hawkins's Creek as they can be found.

The Second Corps will move to Chesterfield Ford. The Ninth Corps will be directed to move at the same time to Jericho Bridge. The map only shows two roads for the four corps to march upon, but, no doubt, by the use of plantation roads and pressing in guides, others can be found, to give one for each corps.

The troops will follow their respective reconnoitering parties. The trains will be moved at the same time to Milford Station.

Headquarters will follow the Ninth Corps.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
Warren's corps was moved from Harris's Store to Jericho Ford, Wright's following. Warren arrived at the ford early in the afternoon, and by five o'clock effected a crossing under the protection of sharpshooters. The men had to wade in water up to their waists. As soon as enough troops were over to guard the ford, pontoons were laid and the artillery and the rest of the troops crossed. The line formed was almost perpendicular to the course of the river—Crawford on the left, next to the river, Griffin in the center, and Cutler on the right. Lee was found intrenched along the front of their line. The whole of Hill's corps was sent against Warren's right before it had got in position. A brigade of Cutler's division was driven back, the enemy following; but assistance coming up, the enemy was in turn driven back into his trenches with heavy loss in killed and wounded, with about five hundred prisoners left in our hands. By night Wright's corps was up ready to reinforce Warren.

On the 23d Hancock's corps was moved to the wooden bridge which spans the North Anna River just west of where the Fredericksburg railroad crosses. It was near night when the troops arrived. They found the bridge guarded, with troops intrenched, on the north side. Hancock sent two brigades, Egan's and Pierce's, to the right and left, and when properly disposed they charged simultaneously. The bridge was carried quickly, the enemy retreating over it so hastily that many were shoved into the river, and some of them were drowned. Several hundred prisoners were captured. The hour was so late that Hancock did not cross until next morning.
Burnside's corps was moved by a middle road running between those described above, and which strikes the North Anna at Ox Ford, midway between Telegraph Road and Jericho Ford. The hour of its arrival was too late to cross that night.

On the 24th Hancock's corps crossed to the south side of the river without opposition, and formed line facing nearly west. The railroad in rear was taken possession of and destroyed as far as possible. Wright's corps crossed at Jericho early the same day, and took position to the right of Warren's corps, extending south of the Virginia Central railroad. This road was torn up for a considerable distance to the rear (west), the ties burned, and the rails bent and twisted by heating them over the burning ties. It was found, however, that Burnside's corps could not cross at Ox Ford. Lee had taken a position with his center on the river at this point, with the two wings thrown back, his line making an acute angle where it overlooked the river.

Before the exact position of the whole of Lee's line was accurately known I directed Hancock and Warren each to send a brigade to Ox Ford by the south side of the river. They found the enemy too strong to justify a serious attack. A third ford was found between Ox Ford and Jericho. Burnside was directed to cross a division over this ford, and to send one division to Hancock. Crittenden was crossed by this newly discovered ford, and formed up the river to connect with Crawford's left. Potter joined Hancock by way of the Wooden Bridge. Crittenden had a severe engagement with some of Hill's corps on his crossing the river, and lost heavily. When joined to Warren's corps he was no further molested. Burnside still guarded Ox Ford from the north side.

Lee now had his entire army south of the North Anna. Our lines covered his front, with the six miles separating the two wings guarded by but a single division. To get from one wing to the other the river would have to be crossed twice. Lee could reinforce any part of his line from all points of it in a very short march, or could concentrate the whole of it wherever he might choose to assault. We were, for the time, practically two armies besieging.

Lee had been reinforced and was being reinforced largely. About this time the very troops whose coming I had predicted had arrived or were coming in. Pickett with a full division from Richmond was up; Hoke from North Carolina had come with a brigade; and Breckinridge was there—in all probably not less than fifteen thousand men. But he did not attempt to drive us from the field.

On the 22d or 23d I received despatches from Washington saying that Sherman had taken Kingston, crossed the Etowah River, and was advancing into Georgia.

I was seated at the time on the porch of a fine plantation house waiting for Burnside's corps to pass. Meade and his staff, besides my own staff, were with me. The lady of the house, a Mrs. Tyler, and an elderly lady were present. Burnside, seeing us, came up on the porch, his big spurs and saber rattling as he walked. He touched his hat politely to the ladies, and remarked that he supposed they had never seen so many "live Yankees" before in their lives. The elderly lady spoke up promptly, saying, "Oh yes, I have; many more." "Where?" said Burnside. "In Richmond." Prisoners, of course, was understood.

I read my despatch aloud, when it was received. This threw the younger lady into tears. I found the information she had received (and I suppose it was the information generally in circulation through the South) was that Lee was driving us from the State in the most demoralized condition, and that in the Southwest our troops were but little better than prisoners of war. Seeing our troops moving south was ocular proof that a part of her information was incorrect, and she asked me if my news from Sherman was true. I assured her that there was no doubt about it. I left a guard to protect the house from intrusion until the troops should have all passed, and assured her that if her husband was in hiding she could bring him in and he should be protected also. But I presume he was in the Confederate army.

On the 25th I gave orders, through Halleck, to Hunter, who had relieved Sigel, to move up the Valley of Virginia, cross over the Blue Ridge to Charlottesville, and go as far as Lynchburg, if possible, living upon the country and cutting the railroads and canal as he went. After doing this he could find his way back to his base, or join me.

On the same day news was received that Lee was falling back on Richmond. This proved not to be true. But we could do nothing where we were unless Lee would assume the offensive. I determined, therefore, to draw out of our present position and make one more effort to get between him and Richmond. I had no expectation now, however, of succeeding in this; but I did expect to hold him far enough west to enable me to reach the James River high up. Sheridan was now again with the Army of the Potomac.

On the 26th I informed the government at Washington of the position of the two armies; of the reinforcements the enemy had received; of the move I proposed to make;¹ and directed that our base of

¹ Quarles's Mills, Virginia, May 26, 1864.

Major-General Halleck, Washington, D. C.: The relative position of the two armies is now as follows: Lee's right rests on a swamp east of the Richmond and Fredericksburg road and south of the North Anna, his center on the river at Ox Ford, and his left at Little River, with the crossings of Little River guarded as far up as we have gone. Hancock with his corps and one division of the Ninth Corps crossed at Chesterfield Ford and covers the right wing of Lee's army. One division of the Ninth Corps is on the north bank of the Anna at Ox Ford, with bridges above and below at points nearest to it where both banks are held by us, so that it could reinforce either wing of our army with equal facility. The Fifth and Sixth corps, with one division of the Ninth Corps, run from the south bank of the Anna from a short distance above Ox Ford to Little River, and parallel with and near to the enemy.

To make a direct attack from either wing would cause a slaughter of our men that even success would not justify. To turn the enemy by his right, between the two Annas, is impossible on account of the swamp upon which his right rests. To turn him by the left leaves Little River, New Found River, and South Anna River—all of them streams presenting considerable obstacles to the movement of our army—to be crossed. I have determined, therefore, to turn the enemy's right by crossing at or near Hanover Town. This crosses all three streams at once, and leaves us still where we can draw supplies.

During the last night the teams and artillery not in position, belonging to the right wing of our army, and one division of that wing, were quietly withdrawn to the north bank of the river and moved down to the rear of the left. As soon as it is dark this division, with most of the cavalry, will commence a forced march for Hanover Town, to seize and hold the crossings. The balance of the right wing will withdraw at the same hour, and follow as rapidly as possible. The left wing will also withdraw from the south bank of the river to-night and follow in rear of the right wing.

Lee's army is really whipped. The prisoners we now take show it, and the action of his army shows it unmistakably. A battle with them outside of intrenchments cannot be had. Our men supplies should be shifted to White House, on the Pamunkey. The wagon-train and guards moved directly from Port Royal to White House. Supplies moved around by water, guarded by the navy. Orders had previously been sent, through Halleck, for Butler to send Smith's corps to White House. This order was repeated on the 25th, with directions that they should be landed on the north side of the Pamunkey, and marched until they joined the Army of the Potomac.

It was a delicate move to get the right wing of the Army of the Potomac from its position south of the North Anna in the presence of the enemy. To accomplish it I issued the following order:

Quarles's Mills, Virginia,
May 25, 1864.

Major-General Meade,
Commanding A. P.:

Direct Generals Warren and Wright to withdraw all their teams and artillery not in position to the north side of the river to-morrow. Send that belonging to General Wright's corps as far on the road to Hanover Town as it feel that they have gained the morale over the enemy, and attack him with confidence. I may be mistaken, but I feel that our success over Lee's army is already assured. The promptness and rapidity with which you have forwarded reinforcements has contributed largely to the feeling of confidence inspired in our men, and to break down that of the enemy.

We are destroying all the rails we can on the Central and Fredericksburg roads. I want to leave a gap on the roads north of Richmond so big that to get a single track they will have to import rail from elsewhere. Even if a crossing is not effected at Hanover Town, it will probably be necessary for us to move down the Pamunkey until a crossing is effected. I think it advisable, therefore, to change our base of supplies from Port Royal to the White House. I wish you would direct this change at once, and also direct Smith to put the railroad-bridge there in condition for crossing troops and artillery, and leave men to hold it.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
can go, without attracting attention to the fact. Send with it Wright's best division or division under his ablest commander. Have their places filled up in the line so, if possible, the enemy will not notice their withdrawal. Send the cavalry to-morrow afternoon, or as much of it as you may deem necessary, to watch, and seize if they can, Little-page's Bridge and Taylor's Ford, and to remain on one or other side of the river at these points until the infantry and artillery all pass. As soon as it is dark to-morrow night start the division which you withdraw first from Wright's corps to make a forced march to Hanover Town, taking with them no teams to impede their march. At the same time this division starts commence withdrawing all of the Fifth and Sixth corps from the south side of the river, and march them for the same place. The two divisions of the Ninth Corps not now with Hancock may be moved down the north bank of the river, where they will be handy to support Hancock if necessary, or will be that much on their road to follow the Fifth and Sixth corps. Hancock should hold his command in readiness to follow as soon as the way is clear for him. To-morrow it will leave nothing for him to do, but as soon as he can he should get all his teams and spare artillery on the road or roads which he will have to take. As soon as the troops reach Hanover Town they should get possession of all the crossings they can in that neighborhood. I think it would be well to make a heavy cavalry demonstration on the enemy's left to-morrow afternoon, also.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Wilson's division of cavalry was brought up from the left and moved by our right south to Little River. Here he maneuvered to give the impression that we were going to attack the left flank of Lee's army.

Under cover of night our right wing was withdrawn to the north side of the river, Lee being com-completely deceived by Wilson's feint. On the afternoon of the 26th Sheridan moved, sending Gregg's and Torbert's cavalry to Taylor's and Littlepage's fords toward Hanover. As soon as it was dark both divisions moved quietly to Hanover ferry, leaving small guards behind to keep up the impression that crossings were to be attempted in the morning. Sheridan was followed by a division of infantry under General Russell. On the morning of the 27th the crossing was effected with but little loss, the enemy losing thirty or forty, taken prisoners. Thus a position was secured south of the Pamunkey.

Russell stopped at the crossing while the cavalry pushed on to Hanover Town. Here Barringer's, formerly Gordon's, brigade of rebel cavalry was encountered, but it was speedily driven away.

Warren's and Wright's corps were moved by the rear of Burnside's and Hancock's corps. When out of the way these latter corps followed, leaving pickets confronting the enemy. Wilson's cavalry followed last, watching all the fords until everything had recrossed; then, taking up the pontoons and destroying other bridges, became the rear-guard.

Two roads were traversed by the troops in this move. The one nearest to and north of the North Anna and Pamunkey was taken by Wright, followed by Hancock. Warren, followed by Burnside, moved by a road farther north, and longer. The trains moved by a road still farther north, and had to travel a still greater distance. All the troops that had crossed the Pamunkey on the morning of the 27th remained quiet during the rest of the day, while the troops north of that stream marched to reach the crossing that had been secured for them.
FIELD OF OPERATIONS BETWEEN THE PAMUNKEY AND THE JAMES RIVERS.

National Forces.
Confederate Forces.
Lee had evidently been deceived by our movement from North Anna; for on the morning of the 27th he telegraphed to Richmond: "Enemy crossed to north side, and cavalry and infantry crossed at Hanover Town." The troops that had then crossed left his front the night of the 25th.

The country we were now in was a difficult one to move troops over. The streams were numerous, deep and sluggish, sometimes spreading out into swamps grown up with impenetrable growths of trees and underbrush. The banks were generally low and marshy, making the streams difficult to approach except where there were roads and bridges.

Hanover Town is about twenty miles from Richmond. There are two roads leading there; the most direct and shortest one crossing the Chickahominy at Meadow Bridge, near the Virginia Central railroad, the second going by New and Old Cold Harbor. A few miles out from Hanover Town there is a third road by way of Mechanicsville to Richmond. New Cold Harbor was important to us because while there we both covered the roads back to White House (where our supplies came from), and the roads southeast over which we would have to pass to get to the James River below the Richmond defenses.

On the morning of the 28th the army made an early start, and by noon all had crossed except Burnside's corps. This was left on the north side temporarily to guard the large wagon-train. A line was at once formed extending south from the river, Wright's corps on the right, Hancock's in the center, and Warren's on the left, ready to meet the enemy if he should come.
At the same time Sheridan was directed to reconnoiter toward Mechanicsville to find Lee’s position. At Hawes’s Shop, just where the middle road leaves the direct road to Richmond, he encountered the Confederate cavalry dismounted and partially intrenched. Gregg attacked with his division, but was unable to move the enemy. In the evening Custer came up with a brigade. The attack was now renewed, the cavalry dismounting and charging as infantry. This time the assault was successful, both sides losing a considerable number of men. But our troops had to bury the dead, and found that more Confederate than Union soldiers had been killed. The position was easily held, because our infantry was near.

On the 29th a reconnaissance was made in force, to find the position of Lee. Wright’s corps pushed to Hanover Court House. Hancock’s corps pushed toward Totopotomoy Creek; Warren’s corps to the left on the Shady Grove Church road; while Burnside was held in reserve. Our advance was pushed forward three miles on the left with but little fighting. There was now an appearance of a movement past our left flank, and Sheridan was sent to meet it.

On the 30th Hancock moved to the Totopotomoy, where he found the enemy strongly fortified. Wright was moved to the right of Hancock’s corps, and Burnside was brought forward and crossed, taking position to the left of Hancock. Warren moved up near Huntley Corners on the Shady Grove Church road. There was some skirmishing along the center, and in the evening Early attacked Warren with some vigor, driving him back at first, and threatening to turn our left flank. As the best means of reinforcing the left, Hancock was ordered to attack in his front. He carried and held the rifle-pits. While this was going on Warren got his men up, repulsed Early, and drove him more than a mile.

On this day I wrote to Halleck ordering all the pontoons in Washington to be sent to City Point. In the evening news was received of the arrival of Smith with his corps at White House. I notified Meade, in writing, as follows:

N E A R  H A W E S ' S  S H O P, V I R G I N I A, 6:40 P.M., May 30, 1864.

M A J O R - G E N E R A L  M E A D E,
Commanding A. P.:

General Smith will debark his force at the White House to-night and start up the south bank of the Pamunkey at an early hour, probably at 3 A.M. in the morning. It is not improbable that the enemy, being aware of Smith's movement, will be feeling to get on our left flank for the purpose of cutting him off, or by a dash to crush him and get back before we are aware of it. Sheridan ought to be notified to watch the enemy's movements well out toward Cold Harbor, and also on the Mechanicsville road. Wright should be got well massed on Hancock's right, so that, if it becomes necessary, he can take the place of the latter readily whilst troops are being thrown east of the Totopotomoy if necessary.

I want Sheridan to send a cavalry force of at least half a brigade, if not a whole brigade, at 5 o'clock in the morning, to communicate with Smith and to return with him. I will send orders for Smith by the messenger you send to Sheridan with his orders.

U. S. GRANT.

I also notified Smith of his danger and the precautions that would be taken to protect him.
The Kilpatrick-Dahlgren Raid

Sheridan's Richmond Raid

Sheridan's Trevilian's Raid

Battles of Scale: 5 10 15 miles

- Culpeper C.H.
- Orange C.H.
- Gordonsville
- Trevilian's Station
- Louisa C.H.
- Fredericksburg
- Todd's Tavern
- Bowling Green
- Guiney's Station
- Orange C.H.
- Fredericksburg
- Hawes Station
- Beaver Dam Station
- Chesterfield Station
- Hanover Station
- Henry County
- Henrico C.H.
- King William C.H.
- King George C.H.
- Richmond
- Petersburg
- Dinwiddie C.H.
The night of the 30th Lee's position was substantially from Atlee's Station on the Virginia Central railroad south and east to the vicinity of Cold Harbor. Ours was: The left of Warren's corps was on the Shady Grove road, extending to the Mechanicsville road and about three miles south of the Totopotomoy; Burnside to his right, then Hancock, and Wright on the extreme right, extending toward Hanover Court House, six miles southeast of it. Sheridan with two divisions of cavalry was watching our left front toward Cold Harbor. Wilson with his division on our right was sent to get on the Virginia Central railroad and destroy it as far back as possible. He got possession of Hanover Court House the next day after a skirmish with Young's cavalry brigade. The enemy attacked Sheridan's pickets, but reinforcements were sent up and the attack was speedily repulsed, and the enemy followed some distance toward Cold Harbor.
On the 31st Sheridan advanced to near Old Cold Harbor. He found it intrenched and occupied by cavalry and infantry. A hard fight ensued, but the place was carried. The enemy well knew the importance of Cold Harbor to us, and seemed determined that we should not hold it. He returned with such a large force that Sheridan was about withdrawing without making any effort to hold it against such odds; but about the time he commenced the evacuation he received orders to hold the place at all hazards until reinforcements could be sent to him. He speedily turned the rebel works to face against them and placed his men in position for defense. Night came on before the enemy was ready for assault.

Wright's corps was ordered early in the evening to march directly to Cold Harbor, passing by the rear of the army. It was expected to arrive by daylight or before; but the night was dark and the distance great, so that it was nine o'clock the 1st of June before it reached its destination. Before the arrival of Wright the enemy had made two assaults on Sheridan, both of which were repulsed with heavy loss to the enemy. Wright's corps coming up, there was no further assault on Cold Harbor.

Smith, who was coming up from White House, was also directed to march directly to Cold Harbor, and was expected early on the morning of the 1st of June; but by some blunder the order which reached Smith directed him to New Castle instead of Cold Harbor. Through this blunder Smith did not reach his destination until three o'clock in the afternoon, and then with tired and worn-out men from their long and dusty march. He landed twelve thousand five hundred men from Butler's command, but a division was left at White House temporarily and many men had fallen out of ranks in their long march.

Before the removal of Wright's corps from our right, after dark on the 31st, the two lines, Federal and Confederate, were so close together at that point that either side could detect directly any movement made by the other. Finding at daylight that Wright had left his front, Lee evidently divined that he had gone to our left. At all events, soon after light on the 1st of June, Anderson, who commanded the corps on Lee's left, was seen moving along Warren's front. Warren was ordered to attack him vigorously in flank, while Wright was directed to move out and get on his front. Warren fired his artillery at the enemy, but lost so much time in making ready that the enemy got by; and at three o'clock he reported the enemy was strongly intrenched in his front, and, besides, his lines were so long that he had no mass of troops to move with. He seemed to have forgotten that lines in rear of an army hold themselves while their defenders are fighting in their front. Wright reconnoitered some distance to his front; but the enemy, finding Old Cold Harbor already taken, had halted and fortified some distance west.

By six o'clock in the afternoon Wright and Smith were ready to make an assault. In front of both the ground was clear for several hundred yards, and then became wooded. Both charged across this open space and into the wood, capturing and holding the first line of rifle-pits of the enemy, and also capturing seven or eight hundred prisoners.

While this was going on the enemy charged Warren three separate times with vigor, but was repulsed each time with loss. There was no officer more capable, nor one more prompt in acting, than Warren when the enemy forced him to it. There was also an attack upon Hancock's and Burnside's corps at the same time; but it was feeble and probably only intended to relieve Anderson, who was being pressed by Wright and Smith.

During the night the enemy made frequent attacks with the view of dispossessing us of the important position we had gained, but without effecting his object.

Hancock was moved from his place in line during the night and ordered to the left of Wright. I expected to take the offensive on the morning of the 2d, but the night was so dark, the heat and dust so excessive, and the roads so intricate and hard to keep, that the head of the column only reached Old Cold Harbor at six o'clock, but was in position at 7:30 A.M. Preparations were made for an attack in the afternoon, but it did not take place until the next morning. Warren's corps was moved to the left to connect with Smith; Hancock's corps was got into position to the left of Wright's; and Burnside was moved to Bethesda Church in reserve. While Warren and Burnside were making these changes the enemy came out several times and attacked them, capturing several hundred prisoners. The attacks were repulsed, but not followed up as they should have been. I was so annoyed at this that I directed Meade to instruct his corps commanders that they should seize all such opportunities when they occurred, and not wait for orders, all of our manoeuvres being made for the very purpose of getting the enemy out of his cover.

On this day Wilson returned from his raid upon the Virginia Central railroad, having damaged it considerably. But, like ourselves, the rebels had become experts in repairing such damage. Sherman, in his Memoirs, relates an anecdote of his campaign to Atlanta that well illustrates this point. The rebel cavalry, lurking in his rear to burn bridges and obstruct his communications, had become so disgusted at hearing trains go whistling by within a few hours after a bridge had been burned that they proposed to try blowing up some of the tunnels. One of them said, "No use, boys; old Sherman carries duplicate tunnels with him, and will replace them as fast as you can blow them up; better save your powder."

Sheridan was engaged reconnoitering the banks of the Chickahominy, to find crossings and the condition of the roads. He reported favorably.

During the night Lee moved his left up to make his line correspond to ours. His lines extended now from the Totopotomy to New Cold Harbor; mine from Bethesda Church by Old Cold Harbor to the Chickahominy, with a division of cavalry guarding our right. An assault was ordered for the 3d, to be made mainly by the corps of Hancock, Wright, and Smith; but Warren and Burnside were to support it by threatening Lee’s left, and to attack with great earnestness either if he should reinforce more threatened points by drawing from that quarter, or if a favorable opportunity should present itself.¹

The corps commanders were to select the points in their respective fronts where they would make their assaults. The move was to commence at half-past four in the morning. Hancock sent Barlow and Gibbon forward at the appointed hour, with Birney as a reserve. Barlow pushed forward with great vigor, under a heavy fire of both artillery and musketry, through thickets and swamps. Notwithstanding all the resistance of the enemy and the natural obstructions to overcome, he carried a position occupied by the enemy outside their main line, where the road makes a deep cut through a bank, affording as good a shelter for troops as if it had been made for that purpose. Three pieces of artillery had been captured here, and several hundred prisoners. The guns were immediately turned against the men who had just been using them. No

¹ Near Cold Harbor,
   June 3, 1864, 7 A.M.

Major-General Meade,
Commanding A. P.

The moment it becomes certain that an assault cannot succeed, suspend the offensive; but when one does succeed, push it vigorously, and if necessary pile in troops at the successful point from wherever they can be taken. I shall go to where you are in the course of an hour.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
assistance coming to him, he (Barlow) intrenched under fire and continued to hold his place. Gibbon was not so fortunate in his front. He found the ground over which he had to pass cut up with deep ravines, and a morass difficult to cross. But his men struggled on until some of them got up to the very parapet covering the enemy. Gibbon gained ground much nearer the enemy than that which he left, and here he intrenched and held fast.

Wright's corps, moving in two lines, captured the outer rifle-pits in its front, but accomplished nothing more. Smith's corps also gained the outer rifle-pits in its front. The ground over which this corps (Eighteenth) had to move was the most exposed of any over which charges were made. An open plain intervened between the contending forces at this point, which was exposed both to a direct and a cross fire. Smith, however, finding a ravine running toward his front, sufficiently deep to protect men in it from cross-fire, and somewhat from a direct fire, put Martindale's division in it, and, with Brooks supporting him on the left and Devens on the right, succeeded in gaining the outer—probably picket—rifle-pits. Warren and Burnside also advanced and gained ground—which brought the whole army on one line.

This assault cost us heavily, and probably without benefit to compensate; but the enemy was not cheered by the occurrence sufficiently to induce him to take the offensive. In fact, nowhere after the battle of the Wilderness did Lee show any disposition to leave his defenses far behind him.

Fighting was substantially over by half-past seven in the morning. At eleven o'clock I started to visit all the corps commanders to see for myself the different positions gained, and to get their opinion of the practicability of doing anything more in their respective fronts.

Hancock gave the opinion that in his front the enemy was too strong to make any further assault promise success. Wright thought he could gain the lines of the enemy, but it would require the cooperation of Hancock's and Smith's corps. Smith thought a lodgment possible, but was not sanguine. Burnside thought something could be done in his front, but Warren differed. I concluded, therefore, to make no more assaults, and a little after twelve directed in the following letter that all offensive action should cease.

Cold Harbor, June 3, 1864, 12:30 p.m.

Major-General Meade,
Commanding A. P.:

The opinion of corps commanders not being sanguine of success in case an assault is ordered, you may direct a suspension of further advance for the present. Hold our most advanced positions and strengthen them. Whilst on the defensive our line may be contracted from the right if practicable. Reconnaissances should be made in front of every corps, and advances made to advantageous positions by regular approaches. To aid the expedition under General Hunter it is necessary that we should detain all the army now with Lee until the former gets well on his way to Lynchburg. To do this effectually it will be better to keep the enemy out of the intrenchments of Richmond than to have them go back there.

Wright and Hancock should be ready to assault in case the enemy should break through General Smith's lines, and all should be ready to resist an assault.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
GENERAL GRANT AND STAFF AT BETHPEDIA CHURCH. GENERAL GRANT IS SITTING WITH HIS BACK TO THE SMALLER TREE. (FROM A WAR-TIME PHOTOGRAPH.)
The remainder of the day was spent in strengthening the line we now held. By night we were as strong against Lee as he was against us.

During the night the enemy quitted our right front, abandoning some of his wounded, and without burying his dead. These we were able to care for. But there were many dead and wounded men between the lines of the contending forces, which were now close together, who could not be cared for without a cessation of hostilities.

So I wrote the following:

COLD HARBOR, VIRGINIA,
June 5, 1864.

GENERAL R. E. LEE,
Commanding Confederate Army:

It is reported to me that there are wounded men, probably of both armies, now lying exposed and suffering between the lines occupied respectively by the two armies. Humanity would dictate that some provision should be made to provide against such hardships. I would propose, therefore, that hereafter, when no battle is raging, either party be authorized to send to any point between the pickets or skirmish-lines unarmed men bearing litters to pick up their dead or wounded, without being fired upon by the other party. Any other method, equally fair to both parties, you may propose for meeting the end desired will be accepted by me.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

Lee replied that he feared such an arrangement would lead to misunderstanding, and proposed that in future, when either party wished to remove their dead and wounded, a flag of truce be sent. I answered this immediately by saying:
Cold Harbor, Virginia,
June 6, 1864.

General R. E. Lee,
Commanding Army of Northern Virginia:

Your communication of yesterday's date is received. I will send immediately, as you propose, to collect the dead and wounded between the lines of the two armies, and will also instruct that you be allowed to do the same. I propose that the time for doing this be between the hours of 12 M. and 3 P.M. to-day. I will direct all parties going out to bear a white flag, and not to attempt to go beyond where we have dead or wounded, and not beyond or on ground occupied by your troops.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Lee's response was that he could not consent to the burial of the dead and removal of the wounded in the way I proposed, but when either party desired such permission it should be asked for by flag of truce; and he had directed that any parties I might have sent out, as mentioned in my letter, be turned back. I answered:

Cold Harbor, Virginia,
June 6, 1864.

General R. E. Lee,
Commanding Army Northern Virginia:

The knowledge that wounded men are now suffering from want of attention, between the two armies, compels me to ask a suspension of hostilities for sufficient time to collect them in—say two hours. Permit me to say that the hours you may fix upon for this will be agreeable to me, and the same privilege will be extended to such parties as you may wish to send out on the same duty without further application.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
Lee acceded to this; but delays in transmitting the correspondence brought it to the 7th of June—forty-eight hours after it commenced—before parties were got out to collect the men left upon the field. In the mean time all but two of the wounded had died. And I wrote to Lee:

COLD HARBOR, VIRGINIA,
June 7, 1864, 10:30 A.M.

General R. E. Lee,

Commanding Army of Northern Virginia:

I regret that your note of 7 P.M. yesterday should have been received at the nearest corps headquarters, to where it was delivered, after the hour which had been given for the removal of the dead and wounded had expired; 10:45 P.M. was the hour at which it was received at corps headquarters, and between eleven and twelve it reached my headquarters. As a consequence, it was not understood by the troops of this army that there was a cessation of hostilities for the purpose of collecting the dead and wounded, and none were collected. Two officers and six men of the Eighth and Twenty-fifth North Carolina Regiments, who were out in search of the bodies of officers of their respective regiments, were captured and brought into our lines, owing to this want of understanding. I regret this, but will state that as soon as I learned the fact I directed that they should not be held as prisoners, but must be returned to their commands. These officers and men having been carelessly brought through our lines to the rear, I have determined whether they will be sent back the way they came, or whether they will be sent by some other route.

Regretting that all my efforts for alleviating the sufferings of wounded men left upon the battle-field have been rendered nugatory, I remain, etc.,

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

I have always regretted that the last assault at Cold Harbor was ever made. I might say the same thing of the assault of the 22d of May, 1863, at Vicksburg. At Cold Harbor no advantage whatever was gained to compensate for the heavy loss we sustained. Indeed, the advantages other than those of relative losses were on the Confederate side. Before that the Army of Northern Virginia seemed to have acquired a wholesome regard for the courage, endurance, and soldierly qualities generally of the Army of the Potomac. They no longer wanted to fight them "one Confederate to five Yanks." Indeed, they seemed to have given up any idea of gaining any advantage of their antagonist in the open field. They had come to much prefer breastworks in their front to the Army of the Potomac. This charge seemed to revive their hopes temporarily; but it was of short duration. The effect upon the Army of the Potomac was the reverse. When we reached the James River, however, all effects of the battle of Cold Harbor seemed to have disappeared.

There was more justification for the assault at Vicksburg. We were in a Southern climate, at the beginning of the hot season. The Army of the Tennessee had won five successive victories over the garrison of Vicksburg in the three preceding weeks. They had driven a portion of that army from Port Gibson with considerable loss, after having flanked them out of their stronghold at Grand Gulf. They had attacked another portion of the same army at Raymond, more than fifty miles farther in the interior of the State, and driven them back into Jackson with great loss in killed, wounded, captured, and missing, besides loss of large and small arms. They had captured the capital of the State of Mississippi, with a large amount of materials of war and manufactures. Only a few days before, they had beaten the enemy, then penned up in the town, first at Champion's Hill, next at Big Black River Bridge, inflicting upon him a loss of fifteen thousand or more men (including those cut off from returning), besides large losses in arms and ammunition. The Army of the Tennessee had come to believe that they could beat their antagonist under any circumstances. There was no telling how long a regular siege might last. As I have stated, it was the beginning of the hot season in a Southern climate. There was no telling what the casualties might be among Northern troops working and living in trenches, drinking surface-water filtered through rich vegetation, under a tropical sun. If Vicksburg could have been carried in May it would not only have saved the army the risk it ran of a greater danger than from the bullets of the enemy, but it would have given us a splendid army, well equipped and officered, to operate elsewhere with. These are reasons justifying the assault. The only benefit we gained—and it was a slight one for so great a sacrifice—was that the men worked cheerfully in the trenches after that, being satisfied with digging the enemy out. Had the assault not been made I have no doubt that the majority of those engaged in the siege of Vicksburg would have believed that had we assaulted it would have proven successful, and would have saved life, health, and comfort.
LEE'S position was now so near Richmond, and the intervening swamps of the Chickahominy so great an obstacle to the movement of troops in the face of an enemy, that I determined to make my next left-flank move carry the Army of the Potomac south of the James River.\(^1\) Preparations for this

\(^1\) Cold Harbor, June 5, 1864.

Major-General Halleck, Chief of Staff of the Army, Washington, D. C.:

A full survey of all the ground satisfies me that it would be impracticable to hold a line northeast of Richmond that would protect the Fredericksburg railroad, to enable us to use that road for supplying the army. To do so would give us a long vulnerable line of road to protect, exhausting much of our strength to guard it, and would leave open to the enemy all of his lines of communication on the south side of the James. My idea from the start has been to beat Lee's army, if possible, north of Richmond; then, after destroying his lines of communication on the north side of the James River, to transfer the army to the south side and besiege Lee in Richmond, or follow him south if he should retreat.

I now find, after over thirty days of trial, the enemy deems it of the first importance to run no risks with the armies they now have. They act purely on the defensive behind breastworks, or feebly on the offensive immediately in front of them, and where in case of repulse they can instantly retire behind them. Without a greater sacrifice of human life than I am willing to make, all cannot be accomplished that I had designed outside of the city.
were promptly commenced. The move was a hazardous one to make: the Chickahominy River, with its marshy and heavily timbered approaches, had to be crossed; all the bridges over it east of Lee were destroyed; the enemy had a shorter line and better roads to travel on to confront me in crossing; more than fifty miles intervened between me and Butler, by the roads I should have to travel, with both the James and the Chickahominy unbridged to cross; and last, the Army of the Potomac had to be got out of a position but a few hundred yards from the enemy at the widest place. Lee, if he did not choose to follow me, might, with his shorter distance to travel and his bridges over the Chickahominy and the James, move rapidly on Butler and crush him before the army with me could come to his relief. Then, too, he might spare troops enough to send

I have therefore resolved upon the following plan:

I will continue to hold substantially the ground now occupied by the Army of the Potomac, taking advantage of any favorable circumstance that may present itself, until the cavalry can be sent west to destroy the Virginia Central railroad from about Beaver Dam for some twenty-five or thirty miles west. When this is effected I will move the army to the south side of the James River, either by crossing the Chickahominy and marching near to City Point, or by going to the mouth of the Chickahominy on north side and crossing there. To provide for this last and most possible contingency, several ferry-boats of the largest class ought to be immediately provided.

Once on the south side of the James River, I can cut off all sources of supply to the enemy except what is furnished by the canal. If Hunter succeeds in reaching Lynchburg, that will be lost to him also. Should Hunter not succeed, I will still make the effort to destroy the canal by sending cavalry up the south side of the river with a pontoon-train to cross wherever they can.

The feeling of the two armies now seems to be that the rebels can protect themselves only by strong intrenchments, whilst our army is not only confident of protecting itself without intrenchments, but that it can beat and drive the enemy wherever and whenever he can be found without this protection.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
against Hunter, who was approaching Lynchburg, living upon the country he passed through, and without ammunition further than what he carried with him.

But the move had to be made, and I relied upon Lee's not seeing my danger as I saw it. Besides, we had armies on both sides of the James River and not far from the Confederate capital. I knew that its safety would be a matter of the first consideration with the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the so-called Confederate government, if it was not with the military commanders. But I took all the precaution I knew of to guard against all dangers.

Sheridan was sent with two divisions to communicate with Hunter and to break up the Virginia Central railroad and the James River Canal, on the 7th of June, taking instructions to Hunter to come back with him. These instructions were sent with my orders to Meade to MS Heude.

Grant to Meade, W.R.
XXXVI (3)
599.— Meade to Sheridan,
Ibid. 628, 629

1 COLD HARBOR, VIRGINIA, June 6, 1864.

MAJOR-GENERAL D. HUNTER, Commanding Department of West Virginia:

General Sheridan leaves here to-morrow morning, with instructions to proceed to Charlottesville, Virginia, and to commence there the destruction of the Virginia Central railroad, destroying this way as much as possible. The complete destruction of this road and of the canal on James River is of great importance to us. According to the instructions I sent to General Halleck for your guidance, you were to proceed to Lynchburg and commence there. It would be of great value to us to get possession of Lynchburg for a single day. But that point is of so much importance to the enemy that in attempting to get it such resistance may be met as to defeat your getting on to the road or canal at all. I see, in looking over the letter to General Halleck on the subject of your instructions, that it rather indicates that your route should be from Staunton via Charlottesville. If you have so understood it, you will be doing just what I want. The direction I would now give is that if this letter reaches you in the valley between Staunton and Lynchburg, you immediately turn east by the most practicable road until you strike the Lynchburg branch of the Virginia Central road. From thence move east-of Washington and the Valley that Sheridan was on the way to meet him. The canal and Central road, and the regions penetrated by them, were of vast importance to the enemy, furnishing and carrying a large per cent of all the supplies for the Army of Northern Virginia and the people of Richmond. Before Sheridan got off on the 7th news was received from Hunter reporting his advance to Staunton and successful engagement with the enemy near that place on the 5th, in which the Confederate commander, W. E. Jones, was killed. On the 4th of June, the enemy having withdrawn his left corps, Burnside, on our right, was moved up between Warren and Smith. On the 5th Birney returned to Hancock, which extended his left now to the Chickahominy, and Warren was withdrawn to Cold Harbor. Wright was directed to send two divisions to the left to extend down the banks to that stream to Bottom's Bridge. The cavalry extended still farther east to Jones's Bridge.

On the 7th Abercrombie—who was in command at White House, and who had been in command at our base of supplies in all the changes made from the start—was ordered to take up the iron from ward along the line of the road, destroying it completely and thoroughly, until you join General Sheridan. After the work laid out for General Sheridan and yourself is thoroughly done, proceed to join the Army of the Potomac by the route laid out in General Sheridan's instructions.

If any portion of your force—especially your cavalry—is needed back in your department, you are authorized to send it back.

If on receipt of this you should be near to Lynchburg and deem it practicable to reach that point, you will exercise your judgment about going there.

If you should be on the railroad between Charlottesville and Lynchburg, it may be practicable to detach a cavalry force to destroy the canal. Lose no opportunity to destroy the canal.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
the York River railroad and put it on boats, and to be in readiness to move by water to City Point.

On the 8th Meade was directed to fortify a line down the bank overlooking the Chickahominy, under cover of which the army could move.

On the 9th Abercrombie was directed to send all organized troops arriving at White House, without debarking from their transports, to report to Butler. Halleck was at this time instructed to send all reinforcements to City Point.

On the 11th I wrote:

Cold Harbor, Virginia,
June 11, 1864.

Major-General B. F. Butler,
Commanding Department of Virginia and North Carolina:

The movement to transfer this army to the south side of the James River will commence after dark to-morrow night. Colonel Comstock, of my staff, was sent specially to ascertain what was necessary to make your position secure in the interval, during which the enemy might use most of his force against you, and also to ascertain what point on the river we should reach to effect a crossing if it should not be practicable to reach this side of the river at Bermuda Hundred. Colonel Comstock has not yet returned, so that I cannot make instructions as definite as I would wish; but the time between this and Sunday night being so short in which to get word to you, I must do the best I can. Colonel Dent goes to make arrangements for gunboats and transportation to send up the Chickahominy to take to you the Eighteenth Corps. The corps will leave its position in the trenches as early in the evening to-morrow as possible, and make a forced march to Cole's Landing or Ferry, where it should reach by 10 A.M. the following morning. This corps numbers now 15,300 men. They take with them neither wagons nor artillery, these latter marching with the balance of the army to the James ACROSS THE CHICKAHOMINY AND JAMES

River. The remainder of the army will cross the Chickahominy at Long Bridge and at Jones's, and strike the river at the most practicable crossing below City Point.

I directed several days ago that all reinforcements for the army should be sent to you. I am not advised of the number that may have gone, but suppose you have received from six to ten thousand. General Smith will also reach you as soon as the enemy could, going by the way of Richmond.

The balance of the force will not be more than one day behind, unless detained by the whole of Lee's army, in which case you will be strong enough.

I wish you would direct the proper staff-officers, your chief engineer and your chief quartermaster, to commence at once the collection of all the means in their reach for crossing the army on its arrival. If there is a point below City Point where a pontoon-bridge can be thrown, have it laid.

Expecting the arrival of the Eighteenth Corps by Monday night, if you deem it practicable, from the force you have, to seize and hold Petersburg, you may prepare to start on the arrival of troops to hold your present lines. I do not want Petersburg visited, however, unless it is held, nor an attempt to take it unless you feel a reasonable degree of confidence of success. If you should go there, I think troops should take nothing with them except what they can carry, depending upon supplies being sent after the place is secured. If Colonel Dent should not succeed in securing the requisite amount of transportation for the Eighteenth Corps before reaching you, please have the balance supplied.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

P. S.—On reflection I will send the Eighteenth Corps by way of White House. The distance which they will have to march will be enough shorter to enable them to reach you about the same time, and the uncertainty of navigation on the Chickahominy will be avoided.

U. S. Grant.
Cold Harbor, Virginia,
June 11, 1864.

Major-General G. G. Meade,
Commanding Army of the Potomac:

Colonel Comstock, who visited the James River for the purpose of ascertaining the best point below Bermuda Hundred to which to march the army, has not yet returned. It is now getting so late, however, that all preparations may be made for the move to-morrow night without waiting longer.

The movement will be made as heretofore agreed upon; that is, the Eighteenth Corps make a rapid march with the infantry alone, their wagons and artillery accompanying the balance of the army to Cole's Landing or Ferry, and there embark for City Point, losing no time for rest until they reach the latter point.

The Fifth Corps will seize Long Bridge and move out on the Long Bridge road to its junction with Quaker road, or until stopped by the enemy.

The other three corps will follow in such order as you may direct, one of them crossing at Long Bridge and two at Jones's Bridge. After the crossing is effected, the most practicable roads will be taken to reach about Fort Powhatan. Of course this is supposing the enemy makes no opposition to our advance. The Fifth Corps, after securing the passage of the balance of the army, will join or follow in rear of the corps which crosses the same bridge with themselves. The wagon-trains should be kept well east of the troops, and if a crossing can be found, or made, lower down than Jones's, they should take it.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

P. S.—In view of the long march to reach Cole's Landing, and the uncertainty of being able to embark a large number of men there, the direction of the Eighteenth Corps may be changed to White House. They should be directed to load up transports, and start them as fast as loaded without waiting for the whole corps or even whole divisions to go together.

U. S. Grant.
About this time word was received (through the Richmond papers of the 11th) that Crook and Averell had united and were moving east. This, with the news of Hunter's successful engagement near Staunton, was no doubt known to Lee before it was to me. Then Sheridan's leaving with two divisions of cavalry looked indeed threatening, both to Lee's communications and to his supplies. Much of his cavalry was sent after Sheridan, and Early, with Ewell's entire corps, was sent to the Valley. Supplies were growing scarce in Richmond, and the sources from which to draw them were in our hands. People from outside began to pour into Richmond to help eat up the little on hand. Consternation reigned there.

On the 12th Smith was ordered to move at night to White House, not to stop until he reached there, and to take boats at once for City Point, leaving his trains and artillery to move by land.

Soon after dark some of the cavalry at Long Bridge effected a crossing by wading and floundering through the water and mud, leaving their horses behind, and drove away the cavalry pickets. A pontoon-bridge was speedily thrown across, over which the remainder of the army soon passed, and pushed out for a mile or two to watch and detain any advance that might be made from the other side. Warren followed the cavalry, and by the morning of the 13th had his whole corps over. Hancock followed Warren. Burnside took the road to Jones's Bridge, followed by Wright. Ferrero's division, with the wagon-train, moved farther east, by Window Shades and Cole's ferry, our rear being covered by cavalry.
It was known that the enemy had some gunboats at Richmond. These might run down at night and inflict great damage upon us before they could be sunk or captured by our navy. General Butler had, in advance, loaded some vessels with stone, ready to be sunk so as to obstruct the channel in an emergency. On the 13th I sent orders to have these sunk as high up the river as we could guard them and prevent their removal by the enemy.

As soon as Warren's corps was over the Chickahominy it marched out and joined the cavalry in holding the roads from Richmond while the army passed. No attempt was made by the enemy to impede our march, however, but Warren and Wilson reported the enemy strongly fortified in their front. By the evening of the 13th Hancock's corps was at Charles City Court House, on the James River. Burnside's and Wright's corps were on the Chickahominy, and crossed during the night, Warren's corps and the cavalry still covering the army. The material for a pontoon-bridge was already at hand, and the work of laying it was commenced immediately, under the superintendence of Brigadier-General Benham, commanding the Engineer Brigade. On the evening of the 14th the crossing commenced, Hancock in advance, using both the bridge and boats.

When the Wilderness campaign commenced the Army of the Potomac, including Burnside's corps, —which was a separate command until the 24th of May, when it was incorporated with the main army,—numbered about 116,000 men. During the progress of the campaign about 40,000 reinforcements were received. At the crossing of the James River, June 14th–15th, the army numbered about 115,000. Besides the ordinary losses incident to a campaign of six weeks' nearly constant fighting or skirmishing, about one half of the artillery was sent back to Washington, and many men were discharged by reason of the expiration of their term of service. In estimating our strength every enlisted man and every commissioned officer present is included, no matter how employed: in bands, sick in field-hospitals, hospital attendants, company cooks, and all. Operating in an enemy's country, and being supplied always from a distant base, large detachments had at all times to be sent from the front, not only to guard the base of supplies and the roads to it, but all the roads leading to our flanks and rear. We were also operating in a country unknown to us, and without competent guides, or maps showing the roads accurately.

The manner of estimating numbers in the two armies differs materially. In the Confederate army often only bayonets are taken into account; never, I believe, do they estimate more than are handling the guns of the artillery and armed with muskets or carbines. Generally the latter are far enough

---

1 FROM A STATEMENT OF LOSSES COMPILED IN THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FIELD OF ACTION AND DATE</th>
<th>KILLED</th>
<th>WOUNDED</th>
<th>MISSING</th>
<th>AGGREGATE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Wilderness, May 5th to 7th</td>
<td>2,261</td>
<td>8,785</td>
<td>2,902</td>
<td>13,948</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spottsylvania, May 8th to 21st</td>
<td>2,271</td>
<td>9,360</td>
<td>1,970</td>
<td>13,601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>North Anna, May 23rd to 27th</td>
<td>186</td>
<td>792</td>
<td>165</td>
<td>1,343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Totopotomoy, May 27th to 31st</td>
<td>39</td>
<td>358</td>
<td>52</td>
<td>509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cold Harbor, May 31st to June 12th</td>
<td>1,759</td>
<td>6,752</td>
<td>1,537</td>
<td>10,058</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>6,586</td>
<td>26,047</td>
<td>6,626</td>
<td>39,259</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
away to be excluded from the count in any one field. Officers and details of enlisted men are not included. In the Northern armies the estimate is most liberal, taking in all connected with the army and drawing pay.

Estimated in the same manner as ours, Lee had not less than eighty thousand men at the start. His reinforcements were about equal to ours during the campaign, deducting the discharged men and those sent back. He was on the defensive, and in a country in which every stream, every road, every obstacle to the movement of troops, and every natural defense was familiar to him and his army. The citizens were all friendly to him and his cause, and could and did furnish him with accurate reports of our every move. Rear-guards were not necessary for him, and having always a railroad at his back, large wagon-trains were not required. All circumstances considered, we did not have any advantage in numbers.

General Lee, who had led the Army of Northern Virginia in all these contests, was a very highly estimated man in the Confederate army and States, and filled also a very high place in the estimation of the people and press of the Northern States. His praise was sounded throughout the entire North after every action he was engaged in; the number of his forces was always lowered, and that of the National forces exaggerated. He was a large, austere man, and, I judge, difficult of approach to his subordinates. To be extolled by the entire press of the South after every engagement, and by a portion of the press North with equal vehemence, was calculated to give him the entire confidence of his troops and to make him feared by his antagonists. It was not an uncommon thing for my staff-officers to hear from Eastern officers, "Well, Grant has never met Bobby Lee yet." There are good and true officers who believe now that the Army of Northern Virginia was superior to the Army of the Potomac man to man. I do not believe so, except as the advantages spoken of above made them so. Before the end I believe the difference was the other way. The Army of Northern Virginia became despondent and saw the end. It was not pleased thereby. The National army saw the same thing, and was encouraged by it.
GENERAL GRANT AT HEADQUARTERS DURING THE VIRGINIA CAMPAIGN.

(FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.)

The advance of the Army of the Potomac reached the James on the 14th of June. Preparations were at once commenced for laying the pontoon-bridges and crossing the river. As already stated, I had previously ordered General Butler to have two vessels loaded with stone and carried up the river to a point above that occupied by our gunboats, where the channel was narrow, and sunk there so as to obstruct the passage and prevent Confederate gunboats from coming down the river. Butler had had these boats filled and put in position, but had not had them sunk before my arrival. I ordered this done, and also directed that he should turn over all material and boats not then in use in the river to be used in ferrying the troops across.

I then, on the 14th, took a steamer and ran up to Bermuda Hundred to see General Butler for the purpose of directing a movement against Petersburg, while our troops of the Army of the Potomac were crossing.

I had sent General W. F. Smith back from Cold Ante, II, 181
Harbor by the way of White House, thence on steamers to City Point, for the purpose of giving General Butler more troops with which to accomplish this result. General Butler was ordered to send Smith, with his troops reinforced, as far as that could be conveniently done, from other parts of the Army of the James. He gave Smith about six thousand reinforcements, including some twenty-five hundred cavalry under Kautz, and about thirty-five hundred colored infantry under Hinks.

The distance which Smith had to move to reach the enemy's lines was about six miles, and the Confederate advance-line of works was but two miles outside of Petersburg. Smith was to move, under cover of night, up close to the enemy's works, and assault as soon as he could after daylight. I believed then, and still believe, that Petersburg could have been easily captured at that time. It had only about twenty-five hundred men in the defenses, besides some irregular troops, consisting of citizens and employees in the city who took up arms in case of emergency. Smith started as proposed, but his advance encountered a rebel force intrenched between City Point and their lines outside of Petersburg. This position he carried, with some loss to the enemy; but there was so much delay that it was daylight before his troops really got off from there. While there I informed General Butler that Hancock's corps would cross the river and move to Petersburg to support Smith in case the latter was successful, and that I could reinforce there more rapidly than Lee could reinforce from his position.

I returned down the river to where the troops of the Army of the Potomac now were, communicated to General Meade, in writing, the directions I had given to General Butler, and directed him (Meade) to cross Hancock's corps over under cover of night, and push them forward in the morning to Petersburg, halting them, however, at a designated point until they could hear from Smith. I also informed General Meade that I had ordered rations from Bermuda Hundred for Hancock's corps, and desired him to issue them speedily, and to lose no more time than was absolutely necessary. The rations did not reach him, however, and Hancock, while he got all his corps over during the night, remained until half-past ten in the hope of receiving them. He then moved without them, and on the road received a note from General W. F. Smith asking him to come on. This seems to have been the first information that General Hancock had received of the fact that he was to go to Petersburg, or that anything particular was expected of him. Otherwise he would have been there by four o'clock in the afternoon.

Smith arrived in front of the enemy's lines early in the forenoon of the 15th, and spent the day until after seven o'clock in the evening in reconnoitering what appeared to be empty works. The enemy's line consisted of redans occupying commanding positions, with rifle-pits connecting them. To the east side of Petersburg, from the Appomattox back, there were thirteen of these redans, extending a distance of several miles—probably three. If they had been properly manned they could have held out against any force that could have attacked them, at least until reinforcements could have got up from the north of Richmond.
Smith assaulted with the colored troops, and with success. By nine o'clock at night he was in possession of five of these redans and, of course, of the connecting lines of rifle-pits. All of them contained artillery, which fell into our hands. Hancock came up and proposed to take any part assigned to him; and Smith asked him to relieve his men who were in the trenches.

Next morning, the 16th, Hancock himself was in command, and captured another redan. Meade came up in the afternoon and succeeded Hancock, who had to be relieved, temporarily, from the command of his corps on account of the breaking out afresh of the wound he had received at Gettysburg. During the day Meade assaulted and carried one more redan to his right and two to his left. In all this we lost very heavily. The works were not strongly manned, but they all had guns in them, which fell into our hands, together with the men who were handling them in the effort to repel these assaults.

Up to this time Beauregard, who had commanded south of Richmond, had received no reinforcements, except Hoke's division from Drury's Bluff,¹ which

¹ City Point, Virginia, June 17, 1864, 11 a.m.

Major-General Halleck,
Washington, D. C.:

* * * * *

The enemy, in their endeavor to reinforce Petersburg, abandoned their intrenchments in front of Bermuda Hundred. They no doubt expected troops from north of the James River to take their place before we discovered it. General Butler took advantage of this and moved a force at once upon the railroad and plank road between Richmond and Petersburg, which I hope to retain possession of. Too much credit cannot be given to the troops and their commanders for the energy and fortitude displayed during the last five days. Day and night has been all the same, no delays being allowed on any account.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
had arrived on the morning of the 16th; though he had urged the authorities very strongly to send them, believing, as he did, that Petersburg would be a valuable prize which we might seek.

During the 17th the fighting was very severe and the losses heavy; and at night our troops occupied about the same position they had occupied in the morning, except that they held a redan which had been captured by Potter during the day. During the night, however, Beauregard fell back to the line which had been already selected, and commenced fortifying it. Our troops advanced on the 18th to the line which he had abandoned, and found that the Confederate loss had been very severe, many of the enemy's dead still remaining in the ditches and in front of them.

Colonel J. L. Chamberlain, of the Twentieth Maine, was wounded on the 18th. He was gallantly leading his brigade at the time, as he had been in the habit of doing in all the engagements in which he had previously been engaged. He had several times been recommended for a brigadier-generalcy for gallant and meritorious conduct. On this occasion, however, I promoted him on the spot, and forwarded a copy of my order to the War Department, asking that my act might be confirmed and Chamberlain's name sent to the Senate for confirmation without any delay. This was done, and at last a gallant and meritorious officer received partial justice at the hands of his government, which he had served so faithfully and so well.

If General Hancock's orders of the 15th had been communicated to him, that officer, with his usual promptness, would undoubtedly have been upon the ground around Petersburg as early as four o'clock in the afternoon of the 15th. The days were long, and it would have given him considerable time before night. I do not think there is any doubt that Petersburg itself could have been carried without much loss; or, at least, if protected by inner detached works, that a line could have been established very much in rear of the one then occupied by the enemy. This would have given us control of both the Weldon and South Side railroads. This would also have saved an immense amount of hard fighting which had to be done from the 15th to the 18th, and would have given us greatly the advantage in the long siege which ensued.

I now ordered the troops to be put under cover and allowed some of the rest which they had so long needed. They remained quiet, except that there was more or less firing every day, until the 22d, when General Meade ordered an advance toward the Weldon railroad. We were very anxious to get to that road, and even round to the South Side railroad, if possible.

Meade moved Hancock's corps, now commanded by Birney, to the left, with a view to at least force the enemy to stay within the limits of his own line. General Wright, with the Sixth Corps, was ordered, by a road farther south, to march directly for the Weldon road. The enemy passed in between these two corps and attacked vigorously, and with very serious results to the National troops, who were then withdrawn from their advanced position.

The Army of the Potomac was given the investment of Petersburg, while the Army of the James held Bermuda Hundred and all the ground we possessed north of the James River. The Ninth Corps, Burnside's, was placed upon the right at Petersburg; the Fifth, Warren's, next; the Second, Birney's, next; then the Sixth, Wright's, broken off to the left and south. Thus began the siege of Petersburg.
CHAPTER XV

RAID ON THE VIRGINIA CENTRAL RAILROAD—RAID ON THE WELDON RAILROAD—EARLY'S MOVEMENT UPON WASHINGTON—MINING THE WORKS BEFORE PETERSBURG—EXPLOSION OF THE MINE BEFORE PETERSBURG—CAMPAIGN IN THE SHENANDOAH VALLEY—CAPTURE OF THE WELDON RAILROAD

On the 7th of June, while at Cold Harbor, I had, as already indicated, sent Sheridan with two divisions of cavalry to destroy as much as he could of the Virginia Central railroad. General Hunter had been operating up the Shenandoah Valley with some success, having fought a battle near Staunton, where he captured a great many prisoners, besides killing and wounding a good many men. After the battle he formed a junction at Staunton with Averell and Crook, who had come up from the Kanawha or Gauley River. It was supposed, therefore, that General Hunter would be about Charlottesville, Virginia, by the time Sheridan could get there, doing on the way the damage that he was sent to do.

I gave Sheridan instructions to have Hunter, in case he should meet him about Charlottesville, join and return with him to the Army of the Potomac. Lee, hearing of Hunter's success in the Valley, started Breckinridge out for its defense at once. Learning later of Sheridan's going with two divisions, he also sent Hampton with two divisions of cavalry, his own and Fitz-Hugh Lee's.

Sheridan moved to the north side of the North Anna to get out west, and learned of the movement of these troops to the south side of the same stream almost as soon as they had started. He pushed on to get to Trevillian Station to commence his destruction at that point. On the night of the 10th he bivouacked some six or seven miles east of Trevillian, while Fitz-Hugh Lee was the same night at Trevillian Station, and Hampton but a few miles away.

During the night Hampton ordered an advance on Sheridan, hoping, no doubt, to surprise and very badly cripple him. Sheridan, however, by a countermove, sent Custer on a rapid march to get between the two divisions of the enemy and into their rear. This he did successfully, so that at daylight, when the assault was made, the enemy found himself at the same time resisted in front and attacked in rear, and broke in some confusion. The losses were probably very light on both sides in killed and wounded, but Sheridan got away with some five hundred prisoners and sent them to City Point.

During that day, the 11th, Sheridan moved into Trevillian Station, and the following day proceeded to tear up the road east and west. There was considerable fighting during the whole of the day, but the work of destruction went on. In the mean time, at night, the enemy had taken possession of the crossing which Sheridan had proposed to take to go north when he left Trevillian. Sheridan learned, however, from some of the prisoners he had captured here, that General Hunter was about Lynchburg, and therefore that there was no use of his going on to Charlottesville with a view to meet him.

Sheridan started back during the night of the 12th, and made his way north and farther east, coming around by the north side of White House, and arriving there on the 21st. Here he found an abundance of forage for his animals, food for his men, and security while resting. He had been obliged to leave about ninety of his own men in the field-hospital which he had established near Trevillian, and these necessarily fell into the hands of the enemy.

White House up to this time had been a depot; but now that our troops were all on the James River it was no longer wanted as a store of supplies. Sheridan was therefore directed to break it up, which he did on the 22d of June, bringing the garrison and an immense wagon-train with him. All these were over the James River by the 26th of the month, and Sheridan ready to follow.

In the mean time Meade had sent Wilson’s division on a raid to destroy the Weldon and South Side roads. Now that Sheridan was safe and Hampton free to return to Richmond with his cavalry, Wilson’s position became precarious. Meade therefore, on the 27th, ordered Sheridan over the river to make a demonstration in favor of Wilson. Wilson got back, though not without severe loss, having struck both roads; but the damage done was soon repaired.

After these events comparative quiet reigned about Petersburg until late in July. The time, however, was spent in strengthening the intrenchments and making our position generally more secure against a sudden attack. In the mean time I had to look after other portions of my command, where things had not been going on so favorably, always, as I could have wished.

General Hunter, who had been appointed to succeed Sigel in the Shenandoah Valley, immediately took up the offensive. He met the enemy on the 5th of June at Piedmont, and defeated him. On the 8th he formed a junction with Crook and Ave-rell at Staunton, from which place he moved direct on Lynchburg via Lexington, which he reached and invested on the 16th. Up to this time he was very successful; and but for the difficulty of taking with him sufficient ordnance stores over so long a march through a hostile country, he would no doubt have captured Lynchburg. The destruction of the enemy's supplies and manufactories had been very great. To meet this movement under General Hunter, General Lee sent Early with his corps, a part of which reached Lynchburg before Hunter. After some skirmishing on the 17th and 18th, General Hunter, owing to a want of ammunition to give battle, retired from before the place. Unfortunately this want of ammunition left him no choice of route for his return but by way of the Gauley and Kanawha rivers, thence up the Ohio River, returning to Harper's Ferry by way of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. A long time was consumed in making this movement. Meantime the Valley was left open to Early's troops and others in that quarter; and Washington also was uncovered.
Early took advantage of this condition of affairs and moved on Washington.

In the absence of Hunter, General Lew. Wallace, with headquarters at Baltimore, commanded the department in which the Shenandoah lay. His surplus of troops with which to move against the enemy was small in number. Most of these were raw, and consequently very much inferior to our veterans and to the veterans which Early had with him; but the situation of Washington was precarious, and Wallace moved with commendable promptitude to meet the enemy at the Monocacy. He could hardly have expected to defeat him badly, but he hoped to cripple and delay him until Washington could be put into a state of preparation for his reception. I had previously ordered General Meade to send a division to Baltimore for the purpose of adding to the defenses of Washington, and he had sent Ricketts's division of the Sixth Corps (Wright's), which arrived in Baltimore on the 8th of July. Finding that Wallace had gone to the front with his command, Ricketts immediately took the cars and followed him to the Monocacy with his entire division. They met the enemy and, as might have been expected, were defeated; but they succeeded in stopping him for the day on which the battle took place. The next morning Early started on his march to the capital of the nation, arriving before it on the 11th.

Learning of the gravity of the situation, I had directed General Meade to also order Wright with the rest of his corps directly to Washington for the relief of that place, and the latter reached there the very day that Early arrived before it. The Nineteenth Corps, which had been stationed in Louisiana, having been ordered up to reinforce the armies about Richmond, had about this time arrived at Fortress Monroe, on their way to join us. I diverted them from that point to Washington, which place they reached, almost simultaneously with Wright, on the 11th. The Nineteenth Corps was commanded by Major-General Emory.

Early made his reconnaissance with a view of attacking on the following morning, the 12th; but the next morning he found our intrenchments, which were very strong, fully manned. He at once commenced to retreat, Wright following. There is no telling how much this result was contributed to by General Lew. Wallace's leading what might well be considered almost a forlorn hope. If Early had been but one day earlier he might have entered the capital before the arrival of the reinforcements I had sent. Whether the delay caused by the battle amounted to a day or not, General Wallace contributed on this occasion, by the defeat of the troops under him, a greater benefit to the cause than often falls to the lot of a commander of an equal force to render by means of a victory.

Farther west, also, the troubles were threatening. Some time before, Forrest had met Sturgis in command of some of our cavalry in Mississippi and handled him very roughly, gaining a very great victory over him. This left Forrest free to go almost where he pleased, and to cut the roads in rear of Sherman, who was then advancing. Sherman was abundantly able to look after the army that he was immediately with, and all of his military division so long as he could communicate with it; but it was my place to see that he had the means with which to hold his rear. Two divisions under A. J. Smith had been sent to Banks in Louisiana some months before. Sherman ordered these back, with directions to attack Forrest. Smith met and defeated him very badly. I then directed that Smith should hang to Forrest and not let him go, and to prevent by all means his getting upon the Memphis and Nashville railroad. Sherman had anticipated me in this matter, and given the same orders in substance; but receiving my directions for this order to Smith, he repeated it.

On the 25th of June General Burnside had commenced running a mine from about the center of his front under the Confederate works confronting him. He was induced to do this by Colonel Pleasants, of the Pennsylvania Volunteers, whose regiment was mostly composed of miners, and who was himself a practical miner. Burnside had submitted the scheme to Meade and myself, and we both approved of it, as a means of keeping the men occupied. His position was very favorable for carrying on this work, but not so favorable for the operations to follow its completion. The positions of the two lines at that point were only about a hundred yards apart, with a comparatively deep ravine intervening. In the bottom of this ravine the work commenced. The position was unfavorable in this particular: that the enemy’s line at that point was reentering, so that its front was commanded by his own lines both to the right and left. Then, too, the ground was sloping upward back of the Confederate line for a considerable distance, and it was presumable that the enemy had, at least, a detached work on this highest point. The work progressed, and on the 23d of July the mine was finished ready for charging; but I had this work of charging deferred until we were ready for it.

On the 17th of July several deserters came in and said that there was great consternation in Richmond, and that Lee was coming out to make an attack upon us—the object being to put us on the defensive so that he might detach troops to go to Georgia, where the army Sherman was operating against was said to be in great trouble. I put the army commanders, Meade and Butler, on the lookout, but the attack was not made.

I concluded, then, a few days later, to do something in the way of offensive movement myself, having in view something of the same object that Lee had had. Wright's and Emory's corps were in Washington, and with this reduction of my force Lee might very readily have spared some troops from the defenses to send West. I had other objects in view, however, besides keeping Lee where he was. The mine was constructed and ready to be exploded, and I wanted to take that occasion to carry Petersburg if I could. It was the object, therefore, to get as many of Lee's troops away from the south side of the James River as possible. Accordingly, on the 26th, we commenced a movement with Hancock's corps and Sheridan's cavalry to the north side by the way of Deep Bottom, where Butler had a pontoon-bridge laid. The plan, in the main, was to let the cavalry cut loose, and, joining with Kautz's cavalry of the Army of the James, get by Lee's lines and destroy as much as they could of the Virginia Central railroad, while, in the mean time, the infantry was to move out so as to protect their rear and cover their retreat back when they should have got through with their work. We were successful in drawing the enemy’s troops to the north side of the James, as I expected. The mine was ordered to be charged, and the morning of the 30th of July was the time fixed for its explosion. I gave Meade minute orders\(^1\) on the \(^1\) City Point, Virginia, July 24, 1864.

Major-General Meade,
Commanding, etc.:

The engineer officers who made a survey of the front from Bermuda Hundred report against the probability of success from an attack there. The chances, they think, will be better on Burnside’s front. If this is attempted it will be necessary to concentrate all the force possible at the point in the enemy’s line we expect to penetrate. All officers should be fully impressed with the absolute necessity of pushing entirely beyond the enemy’s present line if they should succeed in penetrating it, and of getting back to their present line promptly if they should not succeed in breaking through.

To the right and left of the point of assault all the artillery possible should be brought to play upon the enemy in front during the assault. Their lines would be sufficient for the support of the artillery, and all the reserves could be brought on the flanks of their commands nearest to the point of assault, ready to follow in if successful. The field artillery and infantry held in the lines during the first assault should be in readiness to move at a moment’s notice either to their front or to follow the main assault, as they should receive orders. One thing, however, should be impressed on corps commanders: if they see the enemy giving away on their front or moving from it to reinforce a heavily assaulted portion of their line, they should take advantage of such knowledge and act promptly without waiting for orders from army commanders. General Ord can cooperate with his corps in this movement, and about five thousand troops from Bermuda Hundred can be sent to reinforce you, or can be used to threaten an assault between the Appomattox and James rivers, as may be deemed best.

This should be done by Tuesday morning, if done at all. If not attempted, we will then start at the date indicated to destroy the railroad as far as Hieksford at least, and to Weldon if possible.

Whether we send an expedition on the road or assault at Petersburg, Burnside’s mine will be blown up.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
24th, directing how I wanted the assault conducted, which orders he amplified into general instructions for the guidance of the troops that were to be engaged.

Meade's instructions, which I, of course, approved most heartily, were all that I can see now was necessary. The only further precaution which he could have taken, and which he could not foresee, would have been to have different men to execute them.

The gallery to the mine was over five hundred feet long from where it entered the ground to the point where it was under the enemy's works, and with a cross-gallery of something over eighty feet running under their lines. Eight chambers had been left, requiring a ton of powder each to charge them. All was ready by the time I had prescribed; and on the 29th Hancock and Sheridan were brought back near the James River with their troops. Under cover of night they started to re-cross the bridge at Deep Bottom, and to march directly for that part of our lines in front of the mine.

Warren was to hold his line of intrenchments with a sufficient number of men, and concentrate the balance on the right next to Burnside's corps, while Ord, now commanding the Eighteenth Corps, temporarily under Meade, was to form in the rear of Burnside to support him when he went in. All were to clear off the parapets and the abatis in their front, so as to leave the space as open as possible, and be able to charge the moment the mine had been sprung and Burnside had taken possession. Burnside's corps was not to stop in the crater at all, but push on to the top of the hill, supported on the right and left by Ord's and Warren's corps.
Warren and Ord fulfilled their instructions perfectly so far as making ready was concerned. Burnside seemed to have paid no attention whatever to the instructions, and left all the obstruction in his own front for his troops to get over in the best way they could. The four divisions of his corps were commanded by Generals Potter, Willcox, Ledlie, and Ferrero. The last was a colored division; and Burnside selected it to make the assault. Meade interfered with this. Burnside then took Ledlie's division—a worse selection than the first could have been. In fact, Potter and Willcox were the only division commanders Burnside had who were equal to the occasion. Ledlie, besides being otherwise inefficient, proved also to possess a disqualification less common among soldiers.

There was some delay about the explosion of the mine, so that it did not go off until about five o'clock in the morning. When it did explode it was very successful, making a crater twenty feet deep and something like a hundred feet in length. Instantly one hundred and ten cannon and fifty mortars, which had been placed in the most commanding positions covering the ground to the right and left of where the troops were to enter the enemy's lines, commenced playing. Ledlie's division marched into the crater immediately on the explosion, but most of the men stopped there in the absence of any one to give directions, their commander having found some safe retreat to get into before they started. There was some delay on the left and right in advancing, but some of the troops did get in and turn to the right and left, carrying the rifle-pits, as I expected they would do.
There had been great consternation in Petersburg, as we were well aware, about a rumored mine that we were going to explode. They knew we were mining, and they had failed to cut our mine off by countermining, though Beauregard had taken the precaution to run up a line of intrenchments to the rear of that part of their line fronting where they could see that our men were at work. We had learned through deserters who had come in that the people had very wild rumors about what was going on on our side. They said that we had undermined the whole of Petersburg; that they were resting upon a slumbering volcano, and did not know at what moment they might expect an eruption. I somewhat based my calculations upon this state of feeling, and expected that when the mine was exploded the troops to the right and left would flee in all directions, and that our troops, if they moved promptly, could get in and strengthen themselves before the enemy had come to a realization of the true situation. It was just as I expected it would be. We could see the men running without any apparent object except to get away. It was half an hour before musketry firing, to amount to anything, was opened upon our men in the crater; it was an hour before the enemy got artillery up to play upon them; and it was nine o'clock before Lee got up reinforcements from his right to join in expelling our troops.

The effort was a stupendous failure. It cost us about four thousand men, mostly, however, captured; and all due to inefficiency on the part of the corps commander, and the incompetency of the division commander who was sent to lead the assault.
After being fully assured of the failure of the mine, and finding that most of that part of Lee's army which had been drawn north of the James River was still there, I gave Meade directions to send a corps of infantry and the cavalry next morning, before Lee could get his forces back, to destroy fifteen or twenty miles of the Weldon railroad. But misfortunes never come singly. I learned during that same afternoon that Wright's pursuit of Early was feeble because of the constant and contrary orders he had been receiving from Washington, while I was cut off from immediate communication by reason of our cable across Chesapeake Bay being broken. Early, however, was not aware of the fact that Wright was not pursuing until he had reached Strasburg. Finding that he was not pursued, he turned back to Winchester, where Crook was stationed with a small force, and drove him out. He then pushed north until he had reached the Potomac; then he sent McCausland across to Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, to destroy that town. Chambersburg was a purely defenseless town, with no garrison whatever, and no fortifications; yet McCausland, under Early's orders, burned the place and left about three hundred families houseless. This occurred on the 30th of July. I rescinded my orders for the troops to go out to destroy the Weldon railroad, and directed them to embark for Washington city. After burning Chambersburg, McCausland retreated, pursued by our cavalry, toward Cumberland. He was met and defeated by General Kelley and driven into Virginia.

The Shenandoah Valley was very important to the Confederates, because it was the principal storehouse they now had for feeding their armies about Richmond. It was well known that they would make a desperate struggle to maintain it. It had been the source of a great deal of trouble to us heretofore to guard that outlet to the north, partly because of the incompetency of some of the commanders, but chiefly because of interference from Washington. It seemed to be the policy of General Halleck and Secretary Stanton to keep any force sent there, in pursuit of the invading army, moving right and left so as to keep between the enemy and our capital; and, generally speaking, they pursued this policy until all knowledge of the whereabouts of the enemy was lost. They were left, therefore, free to supply themselves with horses, beef-cattle, and such provisions as they could carry away from western Maryland and Pennsylvania. I determined to put a stop to this. I started Sheridan at once for that field of operation, and on the following day sent another division of his cavalry.

I had previously asked to have Sheridan assigned to that command, but Mr. Stanton objected, on the ground that he was too young for so important a command. On the 1st of August, when I sent reinforcements for the protection of Washington, I sent the following orders:

City Point, Virginia,
August 1, 1864, 11:30 A.M.

Major-General Halleck,
Washington, D. C.:

I am sending General Sheridan for temporary duty whilst the enemy is being expelled from the border. Unless General Hunter is in the field in person, I want Sheridan put in command of all the troops in the field, with instructions to put himself south of the enemy and follow him to the death. Wherever the enemy goes, let our troops go also. Once started up the Valley, they ought to be followed until we get possession of the Virginia Central railroad. If General Hunter is in the field, give Sheridan direct command of the Sixth Corps and cavalry division. All the cavalry, I presume, will reach Washington in the course of to-morrow.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

The President in some way or other got to see this despatch of mine directing certain instructions to be given to the commanders in the field operating against Early, and sent me the following very characteristic despatch:

Office U. S. Military Telegraph, War Department,
Washington, D. C., August 3, 1864.

Cipher. 6 p.m.
Lieutenant-General Grant,
City Point, Virginia:

I have seen your despatch in which you say, "I want Sheridan put in command of all the troops in the field, with instructions to put himself south of the enemy and follow him to the death. Wherever the enemy goes, let our troops go also." This, I think, is exactly right, as to how our forces should move. But please look over the despatches you may have received from here, even since you made that order, and discover, if you can, that there is any idea in the head of any one here of "putting our army south of the enemy," or of "following him to the death" in any direction. I repeat to you, it will neither be done nor attempted unless you watch it every day and hour, and force it.

A. Lincoln.
I replied to this that "I would start in two hours for Washington"; and soon got off, going directly to the Monocacy without stopping at Washington on my way. I found General Hunter's army encamped there, scattered over the fields along the banks of the Monocacy, with many hundreds of cars and locomotives, belonging to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, which he had taken the precaution to bring back and collect at that point. I asked the general where the enemy was. He replied that he did not know. He said the fact was that he was so embarrassed with orders from Washington moving him first to the right and then to the left that he had lost all trace of the enemy.

I then told the general that I would find out where the enemy was, and at once ordered steam got up and trains made up, giving directions to push for Halltown, some four miles above Harper's Ferry, in the Shenandoah Valley. The cavalry and the wagon-trains were to march, but all the troops that could be transported by the cars were to go in that way. I knew that the Valley was of such importance to the enemy that, no matter how much he was scattered at that time, he would in a very short time be found in front of our troops moving south.

I then wrote out General Hunter's instructions. I told him that Sheridan was in Washington, and still another division was on its way; and suggested that he establish the headquarters of the department at any point that would suit him best,—Cumberland, Baltimore, or elsewhere,—and give Sheridan command of the troops in the field. The general replied to this that he thought he had better be relieved entirely. He said that General Halleck seemed so much to distrust his fitness for the position he was in that he thought somebody else ought to be there. He did not want in any way to embarrass the cause; thus showing a patriotism that was none too common in the army. There were not many major-generals who would voluntarily have asked to have the command of a department taken from them on the supposition that for some particular reason, or for any reason, the service would be better performed. I told him, "Very well, then," and telegraphed at once for Sheridan to come to the Monocacy, and suggested that I would wait and meet him there.

Sheridan came at once by special train, but reached there after the troops were all off. I went to the station and remained there until he arrived. Myself and one or two of my staff were about all the Union people, except General Hunter and his staff, who were left at the Monocacy when Sheridan arrived. I hastily told Sheridan what had been done and what I wanted him to do, giving him, at the same time, the written instructions which had been prepared for General Hunter and directed to that officer.

Sheridan now had about thirty thousand men to move with, eight thousand of them being cavalry. Early had about the same number; but the superior ability of the National commander over the Confederate commander was so great that all the latter's advantage of being on the defensive was more than counterbalanced by this circumstance. As I had predicted, Early was soon found in front of Sheridan in the Valley, and Pennsylvania and Maryland were speedily freed from the invaders. The importance of the Valley was so great to the Confederates that Lee reinforced Early, but not to the extent that we thought and feared he would.

To prevent as much as possible these reinforcements from being sent out from Richmond, I had to do something to compel Lee to retain his forces about his capital. I therefore gave orders for another move to the north side of the James River, to threaten Richmond. Hancock's corps, part of the Tenth Corps under Birney, and Gregg's division of cavalry were crossed to the north side of the James during the night of the 13th–14th of August. A threatening position was maintained for a number of days, with more or less skirmishing and some tolerably hard fighting; although it was my object and my instructions that anything like a battle should be avoided, unless opportunities should present themselves which would insure great success. General Meade was left in command of the few troops around Petersburg, strongly intrenched; and was instructed to keep a close watch upon the enemy in that quarter, and himself to take advantage of any weakening that might occur through an effort on the part of the enemy to reinforce the north side. There was no particular victory gained on either side; but during that time no more reinforcements were sent to the Valley.

I informed Sheridan of what had been done to prevent reinforcements being sent from Richmond against him, and also that the efforts we had made had proven that one of the divisions which we supposed had gone to the Valley was still at Richmond, because we had captured six or seven hundred prisoners from that division, each of its four brigades having contributed to our list of captures. I also informed him that but one division had gone, and it was possible that I should be able to prevent the going of any more.

To add to my embarrassment at this time, Sherman, who was now near Atlanta, wanted reinforcements. He was perfectly willing to take the raw troops then being raised in the Northwest, saying that he could teach them more soldiering in one day among his troops than they would learn in a week in a camp of instruction. I therefore asked that all troops in camps of instruction in the Northwest be sent to him. Sherman also wanted to be assured that no Eastern troops were moving out against him. I informed him of what I had done, and assured him that I would hold all the troops there that it was possible for me to hold, and that up to that time none had gone. I also informed him that his real danger was from Kirby Smith, who commanded the trans-Mississippi Department. If Smith should escape Steele and get across the Mississippi River, he might move against him. I had, therefore, asked to have an expedition ready to move from New Orleans against Mobile in case Kirby Smith should get across. This would have a tendency to draw him to the defense of that place, instead of going against Sherman.

Right in the midst of all these embarrassments Halleck informed me that there was an organized scheme on foot in the North to resist the draft, and suggested that it might become necessary to draw troops from the field to put it down. He also advised taking in sail and not going too fast.
The troops were withdrawn from the north side of the James River on the night of the 20th. Before they were withdrawn, however, and while most of Lee's force was on that side of the river, Warren had been sent with most of the Fifth Corps to capture the Weldon railroad. He took up his line of march well back to the rear, south of the enemy, while the troops remaining in the trenches extended so as to cover that part of the line which he had vacated by moving out. From our left, near the old line, it was about three miles to the Weldon railroad. A division was ordered from the right of the Petersburg line to reinforce Warren, while a division was brought back from the north side of the James River to take its place.

This road was very important to the enemy. The limits from which his supplies had been drawn were already very much contracted, and I knew that he must fight desperately to protect it. Warren carried the road, though with heavy loss on both sides. He fortified his new position, and our trenches were then extended from the left of our main line to connect with his new one. Lee made repeated attempts to dislodge Warren's corps, but without success, and with heavy loss.

As soon as Warren was fortified and reinforcements reached him, troops were sent south to destroy the bridges on the Weldon railroad; and with such success that the enemy had to draw in wagons, for a distance of about thirty miles, all the supplies he got thereafter from that source. It was on the 21st that Lee seemed to have given up the Weldon railroad as having been lost to him; but along about the 24th or 25th he made renewed attempts to recapture it. Again he failed, and with very heavy losses to him as compared with ours.

On the night of the 20th our troops on the north side of the James were withdrawn, and Hancock and Gregg were sent south to destroy the Weldon railroad. They were attacked on the 25th at Reams's Station, and after desperate fighting a part of our line gave way, losing five pieces of artillery. But the Weldon railroad never went out of our possession from the 18th of August to the close of the war.
CHAPTER XVI

SHERIDAN'S ADVANCE—VISIT TO SHERIDAN—SHERIDAN'S VICTORY IN THE SHENANDOAH—SHERIDAN'S RIDE TO WINCHESTER—CLOSE OF THE CAMPAIGN FOR THE WINTER

We had our troops on the Weldon railroad contending against a large force that regarded this road of so much importance that they could afford to expend many lives in retaking it; Sherman just getting through to Atlanta with great losses of men from casualties, discharges, and detachments left along as guards to occupy and hold the road in rear of him; Washington threatened but a short time before, and now Early being strengthened in the Valley so as, probably, to renew that attempt. It kept me pretty active in looking after all these points.

On the 10th of August Sheridan had advanced on Early up the Shenandoah Valley, Early falling back to Strasburg. On the 12th I learned that Lee had sent twenty pieces of artillery, two divisions of infantry, and a considerable cavalry force to strengthen Early. It was important that Sheridan should be informed of this; so I sent the information to Washington by telegraph, and directed a courier to be sent from there to get the message to...
Visit to Sheridan

Sheridan at all hazards, giving him the information. The messenger, an officer of the army, pushed through with great energy and reached Sheridan just in time. The officer went through by way of Snicker's Gap, escorted by some cavalry. He found Sheridan just making his preparations to attack Early in his chosen position. Now, however, he was thrown back on the defensive.

On the 15th of September I started to visit General Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley. My purpose was to have him attack Early, or drive him out of the Valley and destroy that source of supplies for Lee's army. I knew it was impossible for me to get orders through Washington to Sheridan to make a move, because they would be stopped there, and such orders as Halleck's caution (and that of the Secretary of War) would suggest would be given instead, and would no doubt be contradictory to mine. I therefore, without stopping at Washington, went directly through to Charles-town, some ten miles above Harper's Ferry, and waited there to see General Sheridan, having sent a courier in advance to inform him where to meet me.

When Sheridan arrived I asked him if he had a map showing the positions of his army and that of the enemy. He at once drew one out of his side-pocket, showing all roads and streams, and the camps of the two armies. He said that if he had permission he would move so and so (pointing out how) against the Confederates, and that he could "whip them." Before starting I had drawn up a plan of campaign for Sheridan, which I had brought with me; but, seeing that he was so clear and so positive in his views, and so confident of success, I said nothing about this, and did not take it out of my pocket.

Sheridan's wagon-trains were kept at Harper's Ferry, where all of his stores were. By keeping the teams at that place, their forage did not have to be hauled to them. As supplies of ammunition, provisions, and rations for the men were wanted, trains would be made up to deliver the stores to the commissaries and quartermasters encamped at Winchester. Knowing that he, in making preparations to move at a given day, would have to bring up wagon-trains from Harper's Ferry, I asked him if he could be ready to get off by the following Tuesday. This was on Friday. "Oh yes," he said, he "could be off before daylight on Monday." I told him then to make the attack at that time and according to his own plan; and I immediately started to return to the army about Richmond. After visiting Baltimore and Burlington, New Jersey, I arrived at City Point on the 19th.

On the way out to Harper's Ferry I had met Mr. Robert Garrett, president of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. He seemed very anxious to know when workmen might be put upon the road again so as to make repairs and put it in shape for running. It was a large piece of property to have standing idle. I told him I could not answer then positively, but would try and inform him before a great while. On my return Mr. Garrett met me again with the same question, and I told him I thought that by the following Wednesday he might send his workmen out on his road. I gave him no further information, however, and he had no suspicion of how I expected to have the road cleared for his workmen.

Sheridan moved at the time he had fixed upon. He met Early at the crossing of Opequon Creek, and won a most decisive victory—one which electrified the country. Early had invited this attack himself by his bad generalship, and made the victory easy. He had sent G. T. Anderson's division east of the Blue Ridge before I went to Harper's Ferry; and about the time I arrived there he started with two other divisions (leaving but two in their camps) to march to Martinsburg for the purpose of destroying the Baltimore and Ohio railroad at that point. Early here learned that I had been with Sheridan, and, supposing there was some movement on foot, started back as soon as he got the information. But his forces were separated, and, as I have said, he was very badly defeated. He fell back to Fisher's Hill, Sheridan following.

The Valley is narrow at that point, and Early made another stand there, behind works which extended across. But Sheridan turned both his flanks and again sent him speeding up the Valley, following in hot pursuit. The pursuit was continued up the Valley to Mount Jackson and New Market. Sheridan captured about eleven hundred prisoners and sixteen guns. The houses which he passed all along the route were found to be filled with Early's wounded, and the country swarmed with his deserters. Finally, on the 25th, Early turned from the Valley eastward, leaving Sheridan at Harrisonburg in undisputed possession.

Now one of the main objects of the expedition began to be accomplished. Sheridan went to work with his command, gathering in the crops, cattle, and everything in the upper part of the Valley required by our troops; and especially taking what might be of use to the enemy. What he could not take away he destroyed, so that the enemy would not be invited to come back there. I congratulated Sheridan upon his recent great victory and had a salute of a hundred guns fired in honor of it, the guns being aimed at the enemy around Petersburg. I also notified the other commanders throughout the country, who also fired salutes in honor of his victory.

I had reason to believe that the administration was a little afraid to have a decisive battle fought at that time, for fear it might go against us and have a bad effect on the November elections. The convention which had met and made its nomination of the Democratic candidate for the Presidency had declared the war a failure. Treason was talked as boldly in Chicago at that convention as ever it had been in Charleston. It was a question whether the government would then have had the power to make arrests and punish those who thus talked treason. But this decisive victory was the most effective campaign argument made in the canvass.

Sheridan, in his pursuit, got beyond where they could hear from him in Washington, and the President became very much frightened about him. He was afraid that the hot pursuit had been a little like that of General Cass was said to have been, in one of our Indian wars, when he was an officer of the army. Cass was pursuing the Indians so closely that the first thing he knew he found himself in their front and the Indians pursuing him. The President was afraid that Sheridan had got on the other side of Early and that Early was in behind him. He was afraid that Sheridan was getting so far away that reinforcements would be sent out from Richmond to enable Early to beat him. I replied to the President that I had taken steps to prevent Lee from sending reinforcements to Early, by attacking the former where he was.

On the 28th of September, to retain Lee in his position, I sent Ord with the Eighteenth Corps and Birney with the Tenth Corps to make an advance on Richmond, to threaten it. Ord moved with the left wing up to Chaffin's Bluff; Birney with the Tenth Corps took a road farther north; while Kautz with the cavalry took the Darby road, still farther to the north. They got across the river by the next morning, and made an effort to surprise the enemy. In that, however, they were unsuccessful.

The enemy's lines were very strong and very intricate. Stannard's division of the Eighteenth Corps, with General Burnham's brigade leading, tried an assault against Fort Harrison, and captured it with sixteen guns and a good many prisoners. Burnham was killed in the assault. Colonel Stevens, who succeeded him, was badly wounded; and his successor also fell in the same way. Some works to the right and left were also carried with the guns in them — six in number — and a few more prisoners. Birney's troops to the right captured the enemy's intrenched picket-lines, but were unsuccessful in their efforts upon the main line.

Our troops fortified their new position, bringing Fort Harrison into the new line and extending it to the river. This brought us pretty close to the enemy on the north side of the James, and the two opposing lines maintained their relative positions to the close of the siege.

In the afternoon a further attempt was made to advance, but it failed. Ord fell badly wounded, and had to be relieved; the command devolved upon General Heckman, and later General Weitzel was assigned to the command of the Eighteenth Corps. During the night Lee reinforced his troops about Fort Gilmer, which was at the right of Fort Harrison, by transferring eight additional brigades from Petersburg, and attempted to retake the works which we had captured by concentrating ten brigades against them. All their efforts failed, their attacks being all repulsed with very heavy loss. In one of these assaults upon us General Stannard, a gallant officer, who was defending Fort Harrison, lost an arm. Our casualties during these operations amounted to 394 killed, 1554 wounded, and 324 missing.

While this was going on General Meade was instructed to keep up an appearance of moving troops to our extreme left. Parke and Warren were kept with two divisions, each under arms, ready to move, leaving their inclosed batteries manned, with a scattering line on the other intrenchments. The object of this was to prevent reinforcements from going to the north side of the river. Meade was instructed to watch the enemy closely and, if Lee weakened his lines, to make an attack.

On the 30th these troops moved out, under Warren, and captured an advanced intrenched camp at Peeble's farm, driving the enemy back to the main
Our troops followed and made an attack in the hope of carrying the enemy's main line; but in this they were unsuccessful and lost a large number of men, mostly captured. The number of killed and wounded was not large. The next day our troops advanced again and established themselves, intrenching a new line about a mile in front of the enemy. This advanced Warren's position on the Weldon railroad very considerably.

Sheridan, having driven the enemy out of the Valley, and taken the productions of the Valley, so that instead of going there for supplies the enemy would have to bring his provisions with him if he again entered it, recommended a reduction of his own force, the surplus to be sent where it could be of more use. I approved of his suggestion, and ordered him to send Wright's corps back to the James River. I further directed him to repair the railroad up the Shenandoah Valley toward the advanced position, which we would hold with a small force. The troops were to be sent to Washington by the way of Culpeper, in order to watch the east side of the Blue Ridge, and prevent the enemy from getting into the rear of Sheridan while he was still doing his work of destruction.

The Valley was so very important, however, to the Confederate army that, contrary to our expectations, they determined to make one more strike, and save it, if possible, before the supplies should be all destroyed. Reinforcements were sent, therefore, to Early, and this before any of our troops had been withdrawn. Early prepared to strike Sheridan at Harrisonburg; but the latter had not remained there.
On the 6th of October Sheridan commenced retiring down the Valley, taking or destroying all the food and forage, and driving the cattle before him, Early following. At Fisher's Hill Sheridan turned his cavalry back on that of Early, which, under the lead of Rosser, was pursuing closely, and routed it most completely, capturing eleven guns and a large number of prisoners. Sheridan lost only about sixty men. His cavalry pursued the enemy back some twenty-five miles. On the 10th of October the march down the Valley was again resumed, Early again following.

I now ordered Sheridan to halt, and to improve the opportunity, if afforded by the enemy's having been sufficiently weakened, to move back again and cut the James River Canal and Virginia Central railroad. But this order had to go through Washington, where it was intercepted; and when Sheridan received what purported to be a statement of what I wanted him to do, it was something entirely different. Halleck informed Sheridan that it was my wish for him to hold a forward position as a base from which to act against Charlottesville and Gordonsville; that he should fortify this position and provision it.

Sheridan objected to this most decidedly; and I was impelled to telegraph him, on the 14th, as follows:

City Point, Virginia,
October 14, 1864, 12:30 p.m.

Major-General Sheridan,
Cedar Creek, Virginia:
What I want is for you to threaten the Virginia Central railroad and canal in the manner your judgment tells you is best, holding yourself ready to advance if the enemy draw off their forces. If you make the enemy hold a force equal to your own for the protection of those thoroughfares, it will accomplish nearly as much as their destruction. If you cannot do this, then the next best thing to do is to send here all the force you can. I deem a good cavalry force necessary for your offensive as well as defensive operations. You need not, therefore, send here more than one division of cavalry.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Sheridan, having been summoned to Washington city, started on the 15th, leaving Wright in command. His army was then at Cedar Creek, some twenty miles south of Winchester. The next morning, while at Front Royal, Sheridan received a despatch from Wright, saying that a despatch from Longstreet to Early had been intercepted. It directed the latter to be ready to move and to crush Sheridan as soon as he, Longstreet, arrived. On the receipt of this news Sheridan ordered the cavalry up the Valley to join Wright.

On the 18th of October Early was ready to move, and during the night succeeded in getting his troops in the rear of our left flank, which fled precipitately and in great confusion down the Valley, losing eighteen pieces of artillery and a thousand or more prisoners. The right, under General Getty, maintained a firm and steady front, falling back to Middletown, where it took a position and made a stand. The cavalry went to the rear, seized the roads leading to Winchester, and held them for the use of our troops in falling back, General Wright having ordered a retreat back to that place.

Sheridan, having left Washington on the 18th, reached Winchester that night. The following morning he started to join his command. He had scarcely got out of town when he met his men returning in panic from the front, and also heard heavy firing to the south. He immediately ordered the cavalry at Winchester to be deployed across the Valley to stop the stragglers. Leaving members of his staff to take care of Winchester and the public property there, he set out with a small escort directly for the scene of battle. As he met the fugitives he ordered them to turn back, reminding them that they were going the wrong way. His presence soon restored confidence. Finding themselves worse frightened than hurt, the men did halt and turn back. Many of those who had run ten miles got back in time to redeem their reputation as gallant soldiers before night.

When Sheridan got to the front he found Getty and Custer still holding their ground firmly between the Confederates and our retreating troops. Everything in the rear was now ordered up. Sheridan at once proceeded to intrench his position; and he awaited an assault from the enemy. This was made with vigor, and was directed principally against Emory's corps, which had sustained the principal loss in the first attack. By one o'clock the attack was repulsed. Early was so badly damaged that he seemed disinclined to make another attack, but went to work to intrench himself with a view to holding the position he had already gained. He thought, no doubt, that Sheridan would be glad enough to leave him unmolested; but in this he was mistaken.

About the middle of the afternoon Sheridan advanced. He sent his cavalry by both flanks, and they penetrated to the enemy's rear. The contest was close for a time, but at length the left of the enemy broke, and disintegration along the whole line soon followed. Early tried to rally his men, but they were followed so closely that they had to give way very quickly every time they attempted to make a stand. Our cavalry, having pushed on and got in the rear of the Confederates, captured twenty-four pieces of artillery, besides retaking what had been lost in the morning. This victory pretty much closed the campaigning in the Valley of Virginia. All the Confederate troops were sent back to Richmond, with the exception of one division of infantry and a little cavalry. Wright's corps was ordered back to the Army of the Potomac, and two other divisions were withdrawn from the Valley. Early had lost more men in killed, wounded, and captured in the Valley than Sheridan had commanded from first to last.

On more than one occasion in these engagements General R. B. Hayes, who succeeded me as President of the United States, bore a very honorable part. His conduct on the field was marked by conspicuous gallantry, as well as the display of qualities of a higher order than that of mere personal daring. This might well have been expected of one who could write at the time he is said to have done so, "Any officer fit for duty who at this crisis would abandon his post to electioneer for a seat in Congress, ought to be scalped." Having entered the army as a major of volunteers at the beginning of the war, General Hayes attained by meritorious service the rank of brevet major-general before its close.
GENERAL GRANT, MRS. GRANT, AND MASTER JESSE AT HEADQUARTERS AT CITY POINT.
(FROM PHOTOGRAPH BY E. AND H. T. ANTHONY.)
On the north side of the James River the enemy attacked Kautz's cavalry on the 7th of October, and drove it back with heavy loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners, and the loss of all the artillery. This was followed up by an attack on our intrenched infantry line, but was repulsed with severe slaughter. On the 13th a reconnaissance was sent out by General Butler, with a view to drive the enemy from some new works he was constructing, which resulted in heavy loss to us.

On the 24th I ordered General Meade to attempt to get possession of the South Side railroad, and for that purpose to advance on the 27th. The attempt proved a failure, however, the most advanced of our troops not getting nearer than within six miles of the point aimed for. Seeing the impossibility of its accomplishment, I ordered the troops to withdraw, and they were all back in their former positions the next day.

Butler, by my directions, also made a demonstration on the north side of the James River in order to support this move, by detaining there the Confederate troops who were on that side. He succeeded in this, but failed of further results by not marching past the enemy's left before turning in on the Darby road, and by reason of simply coming up against their lines in place.

This closed active operations around Richmond for the winter. Of course there was frequent skirmishing between pickets, but no serious battle was fought near either Petersburg or Richmond. It would prolong this work to give a detailed account of all that took place from day to day around Petersburg and at other parts of my command.
and it would not interest the general reader if given. All these details can be found by the military student in a series of books published by the Scribners; Badeau's history of my campaigns; and also in the publications of the War Department, including both the National and Confederate reports.

In the latter part of November General Hancock was relieved from the command of the Second Corps by the Secretary of War and ordered to Washington, to organize and command a corps of veteran troops to be designated the First Corps. It was expected that this would give him a large command to cooperate with in the spring. It was my expectation, at the time, that in the final operations Hancock should move either up the Valley, or else east of the Blue Ridge to Lynchburg; the idea being to make the spring campaign the close of the war. I expected, with Sherman coming up from the South, Meade south of Petersburg and around Richmond, and Thomas's command in Tennessee, with depots of supplies established in the eastern part of that State, to move from the direction of Washington or the Valley toward Lynchburg. We would then have Lee so surrounded that his supplies would be cut off entirely, making it impossible for him to support his army.

General Humphreys, chief of staff of the Army of the Potomac, was assigned to the command of the Second Corps, to succeed Hancock.
CHAPTER XVII

THE CAMPAIGN IN GEORGIA—SHERMAN'S MARCH TO THE SEA—WAR ANECDOTES—THE MARCH ON SAVANNAH—INVESTMENT OF SAVANNAH—CAPTURE OF SAVANNAH

Let us now return to the operations in the Military Division of the Mississippi, and accompany Sherman in his march to the sea.

The possession of Atlanta by us narrowed the territory of the enemy very materially, and cut off one of his two remaining lines of roads from east to west.

A short time after the fall of Atlanta Mr. Davis visited Palmetto and Macon and made speeches at each place. He spoke at Palmetto on the 20th of September, and at Macon on the 22d. Inasmuch as he had relieved Johnston and appointed Hood, and Hood had immediately taken the initiative, it is natural to suppose that Mr. Davis was disappointed with General Johnston's policy. My own judgment is that Johnston acted very wisely: he husbanded his men and saved as much of his territory as he could, without fighting decisive battles in which all might be lost. As Sherman advanced, as I have shown, his army became spread out, until, if this had been continued, it would have been easy to destroy it in detail. I know that both Sherman and I were rejoiced when we heard of the change. Hood was unquestionably a brave, gallant soldier, and not destitute of ability; but unfortunately his policy was to fight the enemy wherever he saw him, without thinking much of the consequences of defeat.

In his speeches Mr. Davis denounced Governor Brown, of Georgia, and General Johnston in unmeasured terms, even insinuating that their loyalty to the Southern cause was doubtful. So far as General Johnston is concerned, I think Davis did him a great injustice in this particular. I had known the general before the war, and strongly believed it would be impossible for him to accept a high commission for the purpose of betraying the cause he had espoused. Then, as I have said, I think that his policy was the best one that could have been pursued by the whole South—protract the war, which was all that was necessary to enable them to gain recognition in the end. The North was already growing weary, as the South evidently was also, but with this difference. In the North the people governed, and could stop hostilities whenever they chose to stop supplies. The South was a military camp, controlled absolutely by the government with soldiers to back it, and the war could have been protracted, no matter to what extent the discontent reached, up to the point of open mutiny of the soldiers themselves. Mr. Davis's speeches were frank appeals to the people of Georgia and that portion of the South to come to their relief. He tried to assure his frightened hearers that the Yankees were rapidly digging their own graves; that measures were already being taken to cut them off from supplies from the North; and that, with a force in front and cut off from the rear, they must soon starve in the midst of a hostile people. Papers containing reports of these speeches immediately reached the Northern States, and they were republished. Of course that caused no alarm so long as telegraphic communication was kept up with Sherman.

When Hood was forced to retreat from Atlanta he moved to the southwest, and was followed by a portion of Sherman’s army. He soon appeared upon the railroad in Sherman’s rear, and with his whole army began destroying the road. At the same time, also, the work was begun in Tennessee and Kentucky which Mr. Davis had assured his hearers at Palmetto and Macon would take place. He ordered Forrest (about the ablest cavalry general in the South) north for this purpose; and Forrest and Wheeler carried out their orders with more or less destruction, occasionally picking up a garrison. Forrest, indeed, performed the very remarkable feat of capturing, with cavalry, two gunboats and a number of transports, something the accomplishment of which is very hard to account for. Hood’s army had been weakened by Governor Brown’s withdrawing the Georgia State troops for the purpose of gathering in the season’s crops for the use of the people and for the use of the army. This not only depleted Hood’s forces, but it served a most excellent purpose in gathering in supplies of food and forage for the use of our army in its subsequent march. Sherman was obliged to push on with his force and go himself with portions of it hither and thither, until it was clearly demonstrated to him that with the army he then had it would be impossible to hold the line from Atlanta back and leave him any force whatever with which to take the offensive. Had that plan been adhered to, very large reinforcements would have been necessary; and Mr. Davis’s prediction of the destruction of the army would have been realized, or else Sherman would have been obliged to make a successful retreat, which Mr. Davis said in his speeches would prove more disastrous than Napoleon’s retreat from Moscow.

These speeches of Mr. Davis were not long in reaching Sherman. He took advantage of the information they gave, and made all the preparation possible for him to make to meet what now became expected—attempts to break his communications. Something else had to be done; and to Sherman’s sensible and soldierly mind the idea was not long in dawning upon him, not only that something else had to be done, but what that something else should be.

On September 10th I telegraphed Sherman as follows:

City Point, Virginia,
September 10, 1864.

Major-General Sherman,
Atlanta, Georgia:

So soon as your men are sufficiently rested, and preparations can be made, it is desirable that another campaign should be commenced. We want to keep the enemy constantly pressed to the end of the war. If we give him no peace whilst the war lasts, the end cannot be distant. Now that we have all of Mobile Bay that is valuable, I do not know but it will be the best move to transfer Canby's troops to act upon Savannah, whilst you move on Augusta. I should like to hear from you, however, in this matter.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Sherman replied promptly:

If I could be sure of finding provisions and ammunition at Augusta or Columbus, Georgia, I can march to Milledgeville, and compel Hood to give up Augusta or Macon, and then turn on the other. If you can manage to take the Savannah River as high up as Augusta, or the Chattahoochee as far up as Columbus, I can sweep the whole State of Georgia.

On the 12th I sent a special messenger, one of my own staff, with a letter inviting Sherman's views about the next campaign.

City Point, Virginia,
September 12, 1864.

Major-General W. T. Sherman,
Commanding Military Division of the Mississippi:

I send Lieutenant-Colonel Porter, of my staff, with this. Colonel Porter will explain to you the exact condition of affairs here better than I can do in the limits of a letter. Although I feel myself strong enough for offensive operations, I am holding on quietly to get advantage of recruits and convalescents, who are coming forward very rapidly. My lines are necessarily very long, extending from Deep Bottom north of the James across the peninsula formed by the Appomattox and the James, and south of the Appomattox to the Weldon road. This line is very strongly fortified, and can be held with comparatively few men, but from its great length takes many in the aggregate. I propose, when I do move, to extend my left so as to control what is known as the South Side, or Lynchburg and Petersburg, road, then, if possible, to keep the Danville road cut. At the same time this move is made, I want to send a force of from six to ten thousand men against Wilmington.

The way I propose to do this is to land the men north of Fort Fisher, and hold that point. At the same time a large naval fleet will be assembled there, and the ironclads will run the batteries as they did at Mobile. This will give us the same control of the harbor of Wilmington that we now have of the harbor of Mobile. What you are to do with the forces at your command I do not see. The difficulties of supplying your army, except when you are constantly moving, beyond where you are, I plainly see. If it had not been for Price's movements, Canby would have sent twelve thousand more men to Mobile. From your command on the Mississippi an equal number could have been taken. With these forces my idea would have been to divide them, sending one half to Mobile and the other half to Savannah. You could then move as proposed in your telegram, so as to threaten Macon and Augusta equally. Whichever was abandoned by the enemy you could take and open up a new base of supplies. My object now in sending a staff-officer is not so much to suggest operations for you as to get your views and have plans matured by the time everything can be got ready. It will probably be the 5th of October before any of the plans herein indicated will be executed.

If you have any promotions to recommend, send the names forward and I will approve them. . . .

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

This reached Sherman on September 20th.

On the 25th of September Sherman reported to Washington that Hood's troops were in his rear. He had provided against this by sending a division to Chattanooga and a division to Rome, Georgia, which was in the rear of Hood, supposing that Hood would fall back in the direction from which he had come to reach the railroad. At the same time Sherman and Hood kept up a correspondence relative to the exchange of prisoners, the treatment of citizens, and other matters suitable to be arranged between hostile commanders in the field. On the 27th of September I telegraphed Sherman as follows:

City Point, Virginia,
September 27, 1864, 10:30 a.m.

Major-General Sherman:

I have directed all recruits and new troops from the Western States to be sent to Nashville, to receive their further orders from you.

U. S. Grant,

Lieutenant-General.

On the 29th Sherman sent Thomas back to Chattanooga, and afterward to Nashville, with another division (Morgan's) of the advanced army. Sherman then suggested that, when he was prepared, his movements should take place against Milledgeville and then to Savannah. His expectation at that time was to make this movement as soon as he could get up his supplies. Hood was moving in his own country, and was moving light, so that he could make two miles to Sherman's one. He depended upon the country to gather his supplies, and so was not affected by delays.

As I have said, until this unexpected state of affairs happened, Mobile had been looked upon as the objective point of Sherman's army. It had been a favorite move of mine from 1862, when I first suggested to the then commander-in-chief that the troops in Louisiana, instead of frittering away their time in the trans-Mississippi, should move against Mobile. I recommended this from... time to time until I came into command of the army, the last of March, 1864. Having the power in my own hands, I now ordered the concentration of supplies, stores, and troops in the Department of the Gulf about New Orleans, with a view to a move against Mobile, in support of, and in conjunction with, the other armies operating in the field. Before I came into command these troops had been scattered over the trans-Mississippi Department in such a way that they could not be, or were not, gotten back in time to take any part in the original movement; hence the consideration which had caused Mobile to be selected as the objective point for Sherman’s army, to find his next base of supplies after having cut loose from Atlanta, no longer existed.

General G. M. Dodge, an exceedingly efficient officer, having been badly wounded, had to leave the army about the 1st of October. He was in command of two divisions of the Sixteenth Corps, consolidated into one. Sherman then divided his army into the right and left wings—the right commanded by General O. O. Howard and the left by General Slocum. General Dodge’s two divisions were assigned, one to each of these wings. Howard’s command embraced the Fifteenth and Seventeenth corps, and Slocum’s the Fourteenth and Twentieth corps, commanded by Generals Jeff. C. Davis and A. S. Williams. Generals Logan and Blair commanded the two corps composing the right wing. About this time they left to take part in the Presidential election, which took place that year, leaving their corps to Osterhaus and Ransom. I have no doubt that their leaving was at the earnest solicitation of the War Department. General Blair got back in time to resume his command and to proceed with it throughout the march to the sea and back to the grand review at Washington. General Logan did not return to his command until after it reached Savannah.

Logan felt very much aggrieved at the transfer of General Howard from that portion of the Army of the Potomac which was then with the Western army, to the command of the Army of the Tennessee, with which army General Logan had served from the battle of Belmont to the fall of Atlanta—having passed successively through all grades from colonel commanding a regiment to general commanding a brigade, division, and army-corps, until, upon the death of McPherson, the command of the entire Army of the Tennessee devolved upon him in the midst of a hotly contested battle. He conceived that he had done his full duty as commander in that engagement; and I can bear testimony, from personal observation, that he had proved himself fully equal to all the lower positions which he had occupied as a soldier. I will not pretend to question the motive which actuated Sherman in taking an officer from another army to supersede General Logan. I have no doubt whatever that he did this for what he considered would be to the good of the service, which was more important than that the personal feelings of any individual should not be aggrieved; though I doubt whether he had an officer with him who could have filled the place as Logan would have done. Differences of opinion must exist between the best of friends as to policies in war, and of judgment as to men's fitness. The officer who has the command, however, should be allowed to judge of the fitness of the officers under him, unless he is very manifestly wrong.

Sherman's army, after all the depletions, numbered about sixty thousand effective men. All weak men had been left to hold the rear, and those remaining were not only well men, but strong and hardy, so that he had sixty thousand as good soldiers as ever trod the earth; better than any European soldiers, because they not only worked like a machine, but the machine thought. European armies know very little what they are fighting for, and care less. Included in these sixty thousand troops there were two small divisions of cavalry, numbering altogether about four thousand men. Hood had about thirty-five to forty thousand men, independent of Forrest, whose forces were operating in Tennessee and Kentucky, as Mr. Davis had promised they should. This part of Mr. Davis's military plan was admirable, and promised the best results of anything he could have done, according to my judgment. I say this because I have criticized his military judgment in the removal of Johnston, and also in the appointment of Hood. I am aware, however, that there was high feeling existing at that time between Davis and his subordinate, whom I regarded as one of his ablest lieutenants.

On the 5th of October the railroad back from Atlanta was again very badly broken, Hood having got on the track with his army. Sherman saw after night, from a high point, the road burning for miles. The defense of the railroad by our troops was very gallant, but they could not hold points between their intrenched positions against Hood's whole army. In fact, they made no attempt to do so; but generally the intrenched positions were held, as well as important bridges, and stores located at them. Allatoona, for instance, was defended by a small force of men under the command of General Corse, one of the very able and efficient volunteer officers produced by the war. He, with a small force, was cut off from the remainder of the National army, and was attacked with great vigor by many times his own number. Sherman from his high position could see the battle raging, with the Confederate troops between him and his subordinate. He sent men, of course, to raise the temporary siege, but the time that would be necessarily consumed in reaching Corse would be so great that all occupying the intrenchments might be dead. Corse was a man who would never surrender. From a high position some of Sherman's signal corps discovered a signal-flag waving from a hole in the block-house at Allatoona. It was from Corse. He had been shot through the face, but he signaled to his chief a message which left no doubt of his determination to hold his post at all hazards. It was at this point, probably, that Sherman first realized that with the forces at his disposal the keeping open of his line of communications with the North would be impossible if he expected to retain any force with which to operate offensively beyond Atlanta. He proposed, therefore, to destroy the roads back to Chattanooga, when all ready to move, and leave the latter place garrisoned. Yet, before abandoning the railroad, it was necessary that he should repair damages already done, and hold the road until he could get forward such supplies, ordnance stores, and small rations as he wanted to carry with him on his proposed march, and to return to the north his surplus artillery; his object being to move light, and to have no more artillery than could be used to advantage on the field.

Sherman thought Hood would follow him, though he proposed to prepare for the contingency of the latter's moving the other way while he was moving south, by making Thomas strong enough to hold Tennessee and Kentucky. I myself was thoroughly satisfied that Hood would go north, as he did. On the 2d of November I telegraphed Sherman, authorizing him definitely to move according to the plan he had proposed—that is, cutting loose from his base, giving up Atlanta and the railroad back to Chattanooga. To strengthen Thomas he sent Stanley (Fourth Corps) back, and also ordered Schofield, commanding the Army of the Ohio, twelve thousand strong, to report to him. In addition to this, A. J. Smith, who, with two divisions of Sherman's army, was in Missouri aiding Rosecrans in driving the enemy from that State, was under orders to return to Thomas, and, under the most unfavorable circumstances, might be expected to arrive there long before Hood could reach Nashville.

In addition to this the new levies of troops that were being raised in the Northwest went to Thomas as rapidly as enrolled and equipped. Thomas, without any of these additions spoken of, had a garrison at Chattanooga—which had been strengthened by one division—and garrisons at Bridgeport, Stevenson, Decatur, Murfreesboro', and Florence. There were already with him in Nashville ten thousand soldiers in round numbers, and many thousands of employees in the quartermaster's and other departments who could be put in the intrenchments in front of Nashville, for its defense. Also, Wilson was there with ten thousand dismounted cavalrymen, who were being equipped for the field. Thomas had at this time about forty-five thousand men without any of the reinforcements here above enumerated. These reinforcements gave him altogether about seventy thousand men, without counting what might be added by the new levies already spoken of.

About this time Beauregard arrived upon the field, not to supersede Hood in command, but to take general charge over the entire district in which Hood and Sherman were, or might be, operating. He made the most frantic appeals to the citizens for assistance to be rendered in every way: by sending reinforcements, by destroying supplies on the line of march of the invaders, by destroying the bridges over which they would have to cross, and by, in every way, obstructing the roads to their front. But it was hard to convince the people of the propriety of destroying supplies which were so much needed by themselves, and each one hoped that his own possessions might escape.

Hood soon started north, and went into camp near Decatur, Alabama, where he remained until the 29th of October, but without making an attack on the garrison of that place.

The Tennessee River was patrolled by gunboats from Muscle Shoals east, and also below the second shoals out to the Ohio River. These, with the troops that might be concentrated from the garrisons along the river at any point where Hood might choose to attempt to cross, made it impossible for him to cross the Tennessee at any place where it was navigable. But Muscle Shoals is not navigable, and below them again is another shoal which also obstructs navigation. Hood therefore moved down to a point nearly opposite Florence, Alabama, crossed over, and remained there for some time, collecting supplies of food, forage, and ammunition. All of these had to come from a considerable distance south, because the region in which he was then situated was mountainous, with small valleys which produced but little, and what they had produced had long since been exhausted. On the 1st of November I suggested to Sherman—and also asked his views thereon—the propriety of destroying Hood before he started on his campaign.

On the 2d of November, as stated, I approved definitely his making his proposed campaign through Georgia, leaving Hood behind to the tender mercy of Thomas and the troops in his command. Sherman fixed the 10th of November as the day of starting.

Sherman started on that day to get back to Atlanta, and on the 15th the real march to the sea commenced. The right wing, under Howard, and the cavalry went to Jonesboro; Milledgeville, then the capital of Georgia, being Sherman's objective or stopping-place on the way to Savannah. The left wing moved to Stone Mountain, along roads much farther east than those taken by the right wing. Slocum was in command, and threatened Augusta as the point to which he was moving; but he was to turn off and meet the right wing at Chap. XVII Milledgeville.

Atlanta was destroyed so far as to render it worthless for military purposes before starting, Sherman himself remaining over a day to superintend the work and see that it was well done. Sherman’s orders for this campaign were perfect. Before starting he had sent back all sick, disabled, and weak men, retaining nothing but the hardy, well-inured soldiers to accompany him on his long march in prospect. His artillery was reduced to sixty-five guns. The ammunition carried with them was two hundred rounds for musket and gun. Small rations were taken in a small wagon-train, which was loaded to its capacity for rapid movement. The army was expected to live on the country, and to always keep the wagons full of forage and provisions against a possible delay of a few days.

The troops, both of the right and left wings, made most of their advance along the line of railroads, which they destroyed. The method adopted to perform this work was to burn and destroy all the bridges and culverts, and for a long distance, at places, to tear up the track and bend the rails. Soldiers, to do this rapidly, would form a line along one side of the road with crowbars and poles, place these under the rails, and, hoisting all at once, turn over many rods of road at one time. The ties would then be placed in piles, and the rails, as they were loosened, would be carried and put across these log-heaps. When a sufficient number of rails were placed upon a pile of ties, it would be set on fire. This would heat the rails very much more in

W. R. XXXIX (3) 627, 701, 713
Sherman, Memoirs, II, 176

Vol. II.—16
Chap. XVII

the middle—that being over the main part of the fire—than at the ends, so that they would naturally bend of their own weight; but the soldiers, to increase the damage, would take tongs, and, one or two men at each end of the rail, carry it with force against the nearest tree and twist it around, thus leaving rails forming bands to ornament the forest-trees of Georgia. All this work was going on at the same time, there being a sufficient number of men detailed for that purpose. Some piled the logs and built the fire; some put the rails upon the fire; while others would bend those that were sufficiently heated: so that, by the time the last bit of road was torn up that it was designed to destroy at a certain place, the rails previously taken up were already destroyed.

The organization for supplying the army was very complete. Each brigade furnished a company to gather supplies of forage and provisions for the command to which they belonged. Strict injunctions were issued against pillaging, or otherwise unnecessarily annoying the people; but everything in shape of food for man and forage for beast was taken. The supplies were turned over to the brigade commissary and quartermaster, and were issued by them to their respective commands precisely the same as if they had been purchased. The captures consisted largely of cattle, sheep, poultry, some bacon, corn-meal, often molasses, and occasionally coffee or other small rations.

The skill of these men, called by themselves and the army "bummers," in collecting their loads and getting back to their respective commands, was marvelous. When they started out in the morning they were always on foot; but scarcely one of them returned in the evening without being mounted on a horse or mule. These would be turned in for the general use of the army, and the next day these men would start out afoot and return again in the evening mounted.

Many of the exploits of these men would fall under the head of romance; indeed, I am afraid that in telling some of their experiences the romance got the better of the truth upon which the story was founded, and that, in the way many of these anecdotes are told, very little of the foundation is left. I suspect that most of them consist chiefly of the fiction added to make the stories better. In one instance it was reported that a few men of Sherman’s army passed a house where they discovered some chickens under the dwelling. They immediately proceeded to capture them, to add to the army’s supplies. The lady of the house, who happened to be at home, made piteous appeals to have these spared, saying they were a few she had put away to save, by permission of other parties who had preceded, and who had taken all the others that she had. The soldiers seemed moved at her appeal; but, looking at the chickens again, they were tempted, and one of them replied, “The rebellion must be suppressed if it takes the last chicken in the Confederacy,” and proceeded to appropriate the last one.

Another anecdote characteristic of these times has been told. The South, prior to the rebellion, kept bloodhounds to pursue runaway slaves who took refuge in the neighboring swamps, and also to hunt convicts. Orders were issued to kill all these animals as they were met with. On one occasion a soldier picked up a poodle, the favorite pet of its mistress, and was carrying it off to execution when the lady made a strong appeal to him to spare it. The soldier replied, "Madam, our orders are to kill every bloodhound." "But this is not a bloodhound," said the lady. "Well, madam, we cannot tell what it will grow into if we leave it behind," said the soldier as he went off with it.

Notwithstanding these anecdotes, and the necessary hardship they would seem to imply, I do not believe there was much unwarrantable pillaging, considering that we were in the enemy’s territory and without any supplies except such as the country afforded.

On the 23d Sherman, with the left wing, reached Milledgeville. The right wing was not far off, but proceeded on its way toward Savannah, destroying the road as it went. The troops at Milledgeville remained over a day, to destroy factories, buildings used for military purposes, etc., before resuming their march.

The governor, who had been almost defying Mr. Davis before this, now fled precipitately, as did the Legislature of the State and all the State officers. The governor, Sherman says, was careful to carry away even his garden vegetables, while he left the archives of the State to fall into our hands. The only military force that was opposed to Sherman’s forward march was the Georgia militia, a division under the command of General G. W. Smith, and a battalion under Harry Wayne. Neither the quality of the forces nor their number was sufficient to even retard the progress of Sherman’s army.
The people at the South became so frantic at this time at the successful invasion of Georgia that they took the cadets from the military college and added them to the ranks of the militia. They even liberated the State convicts, under promise from them that they would serve in the army. I have but little doubt that the worst acts that were attributed to Sherman's army were committed by these convicts, and by other Southern people who ought to have been under sentence,—such people as could be found in every community, North and South,—who took advantage of their country being invaded to commit crime. They were in but little danger of detection, or of arrest even if detected.

The Southern papers, in commenting upon Sherman's movements, pictured him as in the most deplorable condition, stating that his men were starving, that they were demoralized and wandering about almost without object, aiming only to reach the sea-coast and get under the protection of our navy. These papers got to the North and had more or less effect upon the minds of the people, causing much distress to all loyal persons—particularly to those who had husbands, sons, or brothers with Sherman. Mr. Lincoln, seeing these accounts, had a letter written asking me if I could give him anything that he could say to the loyal people that would comfort them. I told him there was not the slightest occasion for alarm; that with sixty thousand such men as Sherman had with him, such a commanding officer as he was could not be cut off in the open country. He might possibly be prevented from reaching the point he had started out to reach, but he would get through somewhere and would finally get to his chosen destination; and even if worst came to worst he could return North. I heard afterward of Mr. Lincoln's saying, to those who would inquire of him as to what he thought about the safety of Sherman's army, that Sherman was all right: "Grant says they are safe with such a general, and that if they cannot get out where they want to, they can crawl back by the hole they went in at."

While at Milledgeville the soldiers met at the State House, organized a legislature, and proceeded to business precisely as if they were the legislative body belonging to the State of Georgia. The debates were exciting, and were upon the subject of the situation the South was in at that time, particularly the State of Georgia. They went so far as to repeal, after a spirited and acrimonious debate, the ordinance of secession.

The next day (24th) Sherman continued his march, going by the way of Waynesboro' and Louisville, Millen being the next objective, and where the two columns (the right and left wings) were to meet. The left wing moved to the left of the direct road, and the cavalry still farther off, so as to make it look as though Augusta was the point they were aiming for. They moved on all the roads they could find leading in that direction. The cavalry was sent to make a rapid march in hope of surprising Millen before the Union prisoners could be carried away; but they failed in this.

The distance from Milledgeville to Millen was about one hundred miles. At this point Wheeler, who had been ordered from Tennessee, arrived and swelled the numbers and efficiency of the troops.
confronting Sherman. Hardee, a native of Georgia, also came, but brought no troops with him. It was intended that he should raise as large an army as possible with which to intercept Sherman's march. He did succeed in raising some troops, and, with these and those under the command of Wheeler and Wayne, had an army sufficient to cause some annoyance, but no great detention. Our cavalry and Wheeler's had a pretty severe engagement, in which Wheeler was driven toward Augusta, thus giving the idea that Sherman was probably making for that point.

Millen was reached on the 3d of December, and the march was resumed the following day for Savannah, the final objective. Bragg had now been sent to Augusta with some troops. Wade Hampton was there also, trying to raise cavalry sufficient to destroy Sherman's army. If he ever raised a force it was too late to do the work expected of it. Hardee's whole force probably numbered less than ten thousand men.

From Millen to Savannah the country is sandy and poor, and affords but very little forage other than rice-straw, which was then growing. This answered a very good purpose as forage, and the rice-grain was an addition to the soldiers' rations. No further resistance worthy of note was met with, until within a few miles of Savannah. This place was found to be intrenched and garrisoned. Sherman proceeded at once on his arrival to invest the place, and found that the enemy had placed torpedoes in the ground, which were to explode when stepped on by man or beast. One of these exploded under an officer's horse, blowing the animal to pieces and tearing one of the legs of the officer so badly that it had to be amputated. Sherman at once ordered his prisoners to the front, moving them in a compact body in advance, to either explode the torpedoes or dig them up. No further explosion took place.

On the 10th of December the siege of Savannah commenced. Sherman then, before proceeding any further with operations for the capture of the place, started with some troops to open communication with our fleet, which he expected to find in the lower harbor or as near by as the forts of the enemy would permit. In marching to the coast he encountered Fort McAllister, which it was necessary to reduce before the supplies he might find on shipboard could be made available. Fort McAllister was soon captured by an assault made by General Hazen's division. Communication was then established with the fleet. The capture of Savannah then only occupied a few days, and involved no great loss of life. The garrison, however, as we shall see, was enabled to escape by crossing the river and moving eastward.

When Sherman had opened communication with the fleet he found there a steamer, which I had forwarded to him, carrying the accumulated mails for his army, also supplies which I supposed he would be in need of. General J. G. Foster, who commanded all the troops south of North Carolina on the Atlantic seaboard, visited General Sherman before he had opened communication with the fleet, with the view of ascertaining what assistance he could be to him. Foster returned immediately to his own headquarters at Hilton Head, for the purpose of sending Sherman siege-guns, and also, if he should find he had them to spare, supplies of clothing, hard bread, etc., thinking that these articles might not be found outside. The mail on the steamer which I sent down had been collected by Colonel A. H. Markland, of the Post-office Department, who went in charge of it. On this same vessel I sent an officer of my staff (Lieutenant Dunn) with the following letter to General Sherman:

_City Point, Virginia,_
December 3, 1864.

Major-General W. T. Sherman,
Commanding Armies near Savannah, Georgia:

The little information gleaned from the Southern press indicating no great obstacle to your progress, I have directed your mails (which had been previously collected at Baltimore by Colonel Markland, Special Agent of the Post-office Department) to be sent as far as the blockading squadron off Savannah, to be forwarded to you as soon as heard from on the coast.

Not liking to rejoice before the victory is assured, I abstain from congratulating you and those under your command until bottom has been struck. I have never had a fear, however, for the result.

Since you left Atlanta no very great progress has been made here. The enemy has been closely watched, though, and prevented from detaching against you. I think not one man has gone from here, except some twelve or fifteen hundred dismounted cavalry. Bragg has gone from Wilmington. I am trying to take advantage of his absence to get possession of that place. Owing to some preparations Admiral Porter and General Butler are making to blow up Fort Fisher (which, while hoping for the best, I do not believe a particle in), there is a delay in getting this expedition off. I hope they will be ready to start by the 7th, and that Bragg will not have started back by that time.
In this letter I do not intend to give you anything like directions for future action, but will state a general idea I have, and will get your views after you have established yourself on the sea-coast. With your veteran army I hope to get control of the only two through routes from east to west possessed by the enemy before the fall of Atlanta. The condition will be filled by holding Savannah and Augusta, or by holding any other port to the east of Savannah and Branchville. If Wilmington falls, a force from there can coöperate with you.

Thomas has got back into the defenses of Nashville, with Hood close upon him. Decatur has been abandoned, and so have all the roads except the main one leading to Chattanooga. Part of this falling back was undoubtedly necessary, and all of it may have been. It did not look so, however, to me. In my opinion Thomas far outnumbers Hood in infantry. In cavalry Hood has the advantage in morale and numbers. I hope yet that Hood will be badly crippled, if not destroyed. The general news you will learn from the papers better than I could give it.

After all becomes quiet, and roads become so bad up here that there is likely to be a week or two when nothing can be done, I will run down the coast to see you. If you desire it, I will ask Mrs. Sherman to go with me.

Yours truly,
U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

I quote this letter because it gives the reader a full knowledge of the events of that period.

Sherman now (the 15th) returned to Savannah to complete its investment and ensure the surrender of the garrison. The country about Savannah is low and marshy, and the city was well intrenched from the river above to the river below, and assaults could not be made except along a comparatively narrow causeway. For this reason assaults must have resulted in serious destruction of life to the Union troops, with the chance of failing altogether. Sherman therefore decided upon a complete investment of the place. When he believed this investment completed, he summoned the garrison to surrender. General Hardee, who was in command, replied in substance that the condition of affairs was not such as Sherman had described. He said he was in full communication with his department, and was receiving supplies constantly.

Hardee, however, was cut off entirely from all communication with the west side of the river, and by the river itself to the north and south. On the South Carolina side the country was all rice-fields, through which it would have been impossible to bring supplies—so that Hardee had no possible communication with the outside world except by a dilapidated plank road starting from the west bank of the river. Sherman, receiving this reply, proceeded in person to a point on the coast where General Foster had troops stationed under General Hatch, for the purpose of making arrangements with the latter officer to go through, by one of the numerous channels running inland along that part of the coast of South Carolina, to the plank road which General Hardee still possessed, and thus to cut him off from the last means he had of getting supplies, if not of communication.

While arranging for this movement, and before the attempt to execute the plan had been commenced, Sherman received information through one of his staff-officers that the enemy had evacuated Savannah the night before. This was the night of the 21st of December. Before evacuating the place Hardee had blown up the navy-yard. Some iron-clads had been destroyed, as well as other property that might have been valuable to us; but he left an immense amount of stores untouched, consisting of cotton, railroad cars, workshops, numerous pieces of artillery, and several thousand stands of small arms.

A little incident occurred, soon after the fall of Savannah, which Sherman relates in his "Memoirs," and which is worthy of repetition. Savannah was one of the points where blockade-runners entered. Shortly after the city fell into our possession a blockade-runner came sailing up serenely, not doubting but the Confederates were still in possession. It was not molested, and the captain did not find out his mistake until he had tied up and gone to the custom-house, where he found a new occupant of the building, and made a less profitable disposition of his vessel and cargo than he had expected.

As there was some discussion as to the authorship of Sherman's march to the sea, by critics of his book when it appeared before the public, I want to state here that no question upon that subject was ever raised between General Sherman and myself. Circumstances made the plan on which Sherman expected to act impracticable, and as commander of the forces he necessarily had to devise a new one which would give more promise of success; consequently he recommended the destruction of the railroad back to Chattanooga, and that he should be authorized then to move, as he did, from Atlanta forward. His suggestions were finally approved, although they did not immediately find favor in Washington. Even when it came to the time of starting, the greatest apprehension as to the propriety of the campaign he was about to commence filled the mind of the President, induced, no doubt, by his advisers. This went so far as to move the President to ask me to suspend Sherman's march for a day or two until I could think the matter over. My recollection is, though I find no record to show it, that out of deference to the President's wish I did send a despatch to Sherman asking him to wait a day or two, or else the connections between us were already cut, so that I could not do so. However this may be, the question of who devised the plan of march from Atlanta to Savannah is easily answered: it was clearly Sherman, and to him also belongs the credit of its brilliant execution. It was hardly possible that any one else than those on the spot could have devised a new plan of campaign to supersede one that did not promise success.\(^1\)

I was in favor of Sherman's plan from the time it was first submitted to me. My chief of staff, however, was very bitterly opposed to it, and, as I learned subsequently, finding that he could not move me, he appealed to the authorities at Washington to stop it.

\(^1\) See Appendix, letters of October 11th.
CHAPTER XVIII

THE BATTLE OF FRANKLIN—THE BATTLE OF NASHVILLE

As we have seen, Hood succeeded in crossing the Tennessee River between Muscle Shoals and the lower shoals at the end of October, 1864. Thomas sent Schofield with the Fourth and Twenty-third corps, together with three brigades of Wilson's cavalry, to Pulaski to watch him. On the 17th of November Hood started, and moved in such a manner as to avoid Schofield, thereby turning his position. Hood had with him three infantry corps, commanded respectively by Stephen D. Lee, Stewart, and Cheatham. These, with his cavalry, numbered about forty-five thousand men. Schofield had, of all arms, about thirty thousand. Thomas's orders were, therefore, for Schofield to watch the movements of the enemy, but not to fight a battle if he could avoid it; but to fall back in case of an advance on Nashville, and to fight the enemy, as he fell back, so as to retard the enemy's movements until he could be reinforced by Thomas himself. As soon as Schofield saw this movement of Hood's, he sent his trains to the rear, but did not fall back himself until the 21st, and then only to Columbia. At Columbia there was a slight skirmish, but no battle. From this place Schofield then retreated to Franklin. He had sent his wagons in advance, and Stanley had gone with them with two divisions to protect them. Cheatham's corps of Hood's army pursued the wagon-train and went into camp at Spring Hill for the night of the 29th.

Schofield, retreating from Columbia on the 29th, passed Spring Hill, where Cheatham was bivouacked, during the night without molestation, though within half a mile of where the Confederates were encamped. On the morning of the 30th he had arrived at Franklin.

Hood followed closely and reached Franklin in time to make an attack the same day. The fight was very desperate and sanguinary. The Confederate generals led their men in the repeated charges, and the loss among them was of unusual proportions. This fighting continued with great severity until long after the night closed in, when the Confederates drew off. General Stanley, who commanded two divisions of the Union troops, and whose troops bore the brunt of the battle, was wounded in the fight, but maintained his position.

The enemy's loss at Franklin, according to Thomas's report, was 1750 buried upon the field by our troops, 3800 in the hospital, and 702 prisoners besides. Schofield's loss, as officially reported, was 189 killed, 1033 wounded, and 1104 captured and missing.

Thomas made no effort to reinforce Schofield at Franklin, as it seemed to me at the time he should have done, and fight out the battle there. He simply ordered Schofield to continue his retreat to

---

B. F. Cheatham, Mexico, 1846-48; Brig.-Gen. C.S.A. May, 1861; Maj.-Gen. Sept. 1862

W. R. XLV (1) 113, 341, 652

Ibid. 1171
Nashville, which the latter did during that night and the next day.

Thomas, in the mean time, was making his preparations to receive Hood. The road to Chattanooga was still well guarded with strong garrisons at Murfreesboro', Stevenson, Bridgeport, and Chattanooga. Thomas had previously given up Decatur, and had been reinforced by A. J. Smith's two divisions just returned from Missouri. He also had Steedman's division and R. S. Granger's, which he had drawn from the front. His quartermaster's men, about ten thousand in number, had been organized and armed under the command of the chief quartermaster, General J. L. Donaldson, and placed in the fortifications under the general supervision of General Z. B. Tower, of the United States Engineers.

Hood was allowed to move upon Nashville, and to invest that place almost without interference. Thomas was strongly fortified in his position, so that he would have been safe against the attack of Hood. He had troops enough even to annihilate him in the open field. To me his delay was unaccountable—sitting there and permitting himself to be invested, so that, in the end, to raise the siege he would have to fight the enemy strongly posted behind fortifications. It is true the weather was very bad. The rain was falling, and freezing as it fell, so that the ground was covered with a sheet of ice, that made it very difficult to move. But I was afraid that the enemy would find means of moving, elude Thomas, and manage to get north of the Cumberland River. If he did this, I apprehended most serious results from the campaign in the North, and was afraid we might even have to send troops from the East to head him off if he got there, General Thomas's movements being always so deliberate and so slow, though effective in defense.

I consequently urged Thomas, in frequent despatches sent from City Point,\(^1\) to make the attack

\(^1\) City Point, Virginia, December 2, 1864.

Major-General Thomas,
Nashville, Tennessee:

If Hood is permitted to remain quietly about Nashville, you will lose all the road back to Chattanooga, and possibly have to abandon the line of the Tennessee. Should he attack you, it is all well; but if he does not, you should attack him before he fortifies. Arm and put in the trenches your quartermaster employees, citizens, etc.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

City Point, Virginia,
December 2, 1864.

Major-General Thomas,
Nashville, Tennessee:

With your citizen employees armed, you can move out of Nashville with all your army, and force the enemy to retire or fight upon ground of your own choosing. After the repulse of Hood at Franklin, it looks to me that instead of falling back to Nashville we should have taken the offensive against the enemy where he was. At this distance, however, I may err as to the best method of dealing with the enemy. You will now suffer incalculable injury upon your railroads if Hood is not speedily disposed of. Put forth, therefore, every possible exertion to attain this end. Should you get him to retreating, give him no peace.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

City Point, Virginia,
December 5, 1864.

Major-General Thomas,
Nashville, Tennessee:

Is there not danger of Forrest moving down the Cumberland to where he can cross it? It seems to me, whilst you should be getting up your cavalry as rapidly as possible to look after Forrest, Hood should be attacked where he is. Time strengthens him, in all possibility, as much as it does you.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

City Point, Virginia,
December 6, 1864, 4 p.m.

Major-General Thomas,
Nashville, Tennessee:

Attack Hood at once, and wait no longer for a remnant of your cavalry. There is great danger of delay resulting in a campaign back to the Ohio River.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
at once. The country was alarmed, the administration was alarmed, and I was alarmed lest the very thing would take place which I have just described—that is, Hood would get North. It was all without avail, further than to elicit despatches from Thomas saying that he was getting ready to move as soon as he could, that he was making prepara-

City Point, Virginia,
December 8, 1864, 8:30 P. M.
Major-General Thomas,
Nashville, Tennessee:
Your despatch of yesterday received. It looks to me evident the enemy are trying to cross the Cumberland River, and are scattered. Why not attack at once? By all means avoid the contingency of a foot-race to see which—you or Hood—can beat to the Ohio. If you think necessary, call on the governors of States to send a force into Louisville to meet the enemy if he should cross the river. You clearly never should cross except in rear of the enemy. Now is one of the finest opportunities ever presented of destroying one of the three armies of the enemy. If destroyed he never can replace it. Use the means at your command, and you can do this and cause a rejoicing that will resound from one end of the land to the other.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

City Point, Virginia,
December 11, 1864, 4 P. M.
Major-General Thomas,
Nashville, Tennessee:
If you delay attack longer, the mortifying spectacle will be wit-nessed of a rebel army moving for the Ohio River, and you will be forced to act, accepting such weather as you find. Let there be no further delay. Hood cannot even stand a drawn battle so far from his supplies of ordnance stores. If he retreats and you follow, he must lose his material and much of his army. I am in hopes of receiving a despatch from you today announcing that you have moved. Delay no longer for weather or reinforcements.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Washington, D. C.,
December 15, 1864.
Major-General Thomas,
Nashville, Tennessee:
I was just on my way to Nashville, but receiving a despatch from Van Duzer detailing your splendid success of today, I shall go no farther. Push the enemy now and give him no rest until he is entirely destroyed. Your army will cheerfully suffer many privations to break up Hood’s army and render it useless for future operations. Do not stop for trains or supplies, but take them from the country, as the enemy have done. Much is now expected.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
At last I had to say to General Thomas that I should be obliged to remove him unless he acted promptly. He replied that he was very sorry, but he would move as soon as he could.

General Logan happening to visit City Point about that time, and knowing him as a prompt, gallant, and efficient officer, I gave him an order to proceed to Nashville to relieve Thomas. I directed him, however, not to deliver the order or publish it until he reached there, and if Thomas had moved, then not to deliver it at all, but communicate with me by telegraph. After Logan started, in thinking over the situation, I became restless, and concluded to go myself. I went as far as Washington city, when a despatch was received from General Thomas announcing his readiness at last to move, and designating the time of his movement. I concluded to wait until that time. He did move, and was successful from the start. This was on the 15th of December. General Logan was at Louisville at the time this movement was made, and telegraphed the fact to Washington, and proceeded no farther himself.

The battle during the 15th was severe, but favorable to the Union troops, and continued until night closed in upon the combat. The next day the battle was renewed. After a successful assault upon Hood's men in their intrenchments, the enemy fled in disorder, routed and broken, leaving their dead, their artillery and small arms in great numbers on the field, besides the wounded that were captured. Our cavalry had fought on foot as infantry, and had not their horses with them; so that they were not ready to join in the pursuit the moment the enemy retreated. They sent back, however, for their horses, and endeavored to get to Franklin ahead of Hood's broken army by the Granny White road; but too much time was consumed in getting started. They had got but a few miles beyond the scene of the battle when they found the enemy's cavalry dismounted and behind intrenchments covering the road on which they were advancing. Here another battle ensued, our men dismounting and fighting on foot, in which the Confederates were again routed and driven in great disorder. Our cavalry then went into bivouac, and renewed the pursuit on the following morning. They were too late. The enemy already had possession of Franklin, and was beyond them. It now became a chase in which the Confederates had the lead.

Our troops continued the pursuit to within a few miles of Columbia, where they found the rebels had destroyed the railroad-bridge as well as all other bridges over Duck River. The heavy rains of a few days before had swelled the stream into a mad torrent, impassable except on bridges. Unfortunately, either through a mistake in the wording of the order or otherwise, the pontoon-bridge which was to have been sent by rail out to Franklin, to be taken thence with the pursuing column, had gone toward Chattanooga. There was, consequently, a delay of some four days in building bridges out of the remains of the old railroad bridge. Of course Hood got such a start in this time that further pursuit was useless, although it was continued for some distance, but without coming upon him again.
CHAPTER XIX

EXPEDITION AGAINST FORT FISHER—ATTACK ON THE FORT—FAILURE OF THE EXPEDITION—SECOND EXPEDITION AGAINST THE FORT—CAPTURE OF FORT FISHER

Up to January, 1865, the enemy occupied Fort Fisher, at the mouth of Cape Fear River and below the city of Wilmington. This port was of immense importance to the Confederates, because it formed their principal inlet for blockade-runners, by means of which they brought in from abroad such supplies and munitions of war as they could not produce at home. It was equally important to us to get possession of it, not only because it was desirable to cut off their supplies so as to ensure a speedy termination of the war, but also because foreign governments, particularly the British government, were constantly threatening that unless ours could maintain the blockade of that coast they should cease to recognize any blockade. For these reasons I determined, with the concurrence of the Navy Department, in December, to send an expedition against Fort Fisher for the purpose of capturing it.

To show the difficulty experienced in maintaining the blockade, I will mention a circumstance that took place at Fort Fisher after its fall. Two English blockade-runners came in at night. Their commanders, not supposing the fort had fallen, worked their way through all our fleet and got into the river unobserved. They then signaled the fort, announcing their arrival. There was a colored man in the fort who had been there before and who understood these signals. He informed General Terry what reply he should make to have them come in, and Terry did as he advised. The vessels came in, their officers entirely unconscious that they were falling into the hands of the Union forces. Even after they were brought into the fort they were entertained in conversation for some little time before suspecting that the Union troops were occupying the fort. They were finally informed that their vessels and cargoes were prizes.

I selected General Weitzel, of the Army of the James, to go with the expedition, but gave instructions through General Butler. He commanded the department within whose geographical limits Fort Fisher was situated, as well as Beaufort and other points on that coast held by our troops; he was therefore entitled to the right of fitting out the expedition against Fort Fisher.

General Butler conceived the idea that if a steamer loaded heavily with powder could be run up near the shore under the fort and exploded, it would create great havoc and make the capture an easy matter. Admiral Porter, who was to command the naval squadron, seemed to fall in with the idea, and it was not disapproved of in Washington; the navy was therefore given the task of preparing the steamer for this purpose. I had no confidence in the success of the scheme, and so expressed myself; but as no serious harm could come of the experiment, and the authorities at Washington seemed desirous to have it tried, I permitted it. The steamer was sent to Beaufort, North Carolina, and was there loaded with powder and prepared for the part she was to play in the reduction of Fort Fisher.¹

General Butler chose to go in command of the expedition himself, and was all ready to sail by the 9th of December. Very heavy storms prevailed, however, at that time along that part of the sea-coast, and prevented him from getting off until the 13th or 14th. His advance arrived off Fort Fisher on the 15th. The naval force had been already assembled, or was assembling, but was obliged to run into Beaufort for munitions, coal, etc.; then, too, the powder-boat was not yet fully prepared. The fleet was ready to proceed on the 18th; but Butler, who had remained outside from the 15th up to that time, now found himself out of coal, fresh water, etc., and had to put into Beaufort to replenish. Another storm overtook him, and several days more were lost before the army and navy were both ready at the same time to cooperate.

On the night of the 23d the powder-boat was towed in by a gunboat as near to the fort as it was safe to run. She was then propelled by her own machinery to within about five hundred yards of the shore. There the clockwork, which was to explode her within a certain length of time, was set and she was abandoned. Everybody left, and even the vessels put out to sea to prevent the effect of the explosion upon them. At two o'clock in the morning the explosion took place—and produced no more effect on the fort, or anything else on land, than the bursting of a boiler anywhere on the Atlantic Ocean would have done. Indeed, when the troops in Fort Fisher heard the explosion, they supposed it was the bursting of a boiler in one of the Yankee gunboats.

¹ The report of Major T. L. Casey, of the Corps of Engineers, published in the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, Vol. XLII, part 1, pp. 988-993, gives a full description of the powder-boat, her stowage, and the mechanism for firing the explosives. Embraced also in the report are accounts of several previous military and accidental explosions of large quantities of powder, and their effects.—F. D. G.

Fort Fisher was situated upon a low, flat peninsula north of Cape Fear River. The soil is sandy. Back a little the peninsula is very heavily wooded, and covered with fresh-water swamps. The fort ran across this peninsula, about five hundred yards in width, and extended along the sea-coast about thirteen hundred yards. The fort had an armament of twenty-one guns and three mortars on the land side, and twenty-four guns on the sea-front. At that time it was only garrisoned by four companies of infantry, one light battery, and the gunners at the heavy guns,—less than seven hundred men,—with a reserve of less than a thousand men five miles up the peninsula. General Whiting, of the Confederate army, was in command, and General Bragg was in command of the force at Wilmington. Both commenced calling for reinforcements the moment they saw our troops landing. The Governor of North Carolina called for everybody who could stand behind a parapet and shoot a gun to join them. In this way they got two or three hundred additional men into Fort Fisher; and Hoke’s division, five or six thousand strong, was sent down from Richmond. A few of these troops arrived the very day that Butler was ready to advance.

On the 24th the fleet formed for an attack in arcs of concentric circles, their heavy ironclads going in very close range, being nearest the shore, and leaving intervals or spaces so that the outer vessels could fire between them. Porter was thus enabled to throw one hundred and fifteen shells per minute. The damage done to the fort by these shells was very slight, only two or three cannon being disabled in the fort. But the firing silenced all the guns by making it too hot for the men to maintain their positions about them, and compelling them to seek shelter in the bomb-proofs.

On the next day part of Butler’s troops, under General Adelbert Ames, effected a landing out of range of the fort without difficulty. This was accomplished under the protection of gunboats sent for the purpose, and under cover of a renewed attack upon the fort by the fleet. They formed a line across the peninsula and advanced, part going north and part toward the fort, covering themselves as they did so. Curtis pushed forward and came near to Fort Fisher, capturing the small garrison at what was called the Flag Pond Battery. Weitzel accompanied him to within half a mile of the works. Here he saw that the fort had not been injured, and so reported to Butler, advising against an assault. Ames, who had gone north in his advance, captured two hundred and twenty-eight of the reserves. These prisoners reported to Butler that sixteen hundred of Hoke's division of six thousand from Richmond had already arrived, and the rest would soon be in his rear.

Upon these reports Butler determined to withdraw his troops from the peninsula and return to the fleet. At that time there had not been a man on our side injured except by one of the shells from the fleet. Curtis had got within a few yards of the works. Some of his men had snatched a flag from the parapet of the fort, and others had taken a horse from the inside of the stockade. At night Butler informed Porter of his withdrawal, giving the reasons above stated, and announced his purpose, as soon as his men could embark, to start for Hampton Roads. Porter represented to him that he had sent to Beaufort for more ammunition. He could fire much faster than he had been doing, and would keep the enemy from showing himself until our men were within twenty yards of the fort; and he begged that Butler would leave some brave fellows like those who had snatched the flag from the parapet and taken the horse from the fort.

Butler was unchangeable. He got all his troops aboard, except Curtis's brigade, and started back. In doing this Butler made a fearful mistake. My instructions to him, or to the officer who went in command of the expedition, were explicit in the statement that to effect a landing would be of itself a great victory, and if one should be effected, the foothold must not be relinquished. On the contrary, a regular siege of the fort must be commenced; and to guard against interference by reason of storms, supplies of provisions must be laid in as soon as they could be got on shore. But General Butler seems to have lost sight of this part of his instructions, and was back at Fort Monroe on the 28th.

I telegraphed to the President as follows:

City Point, Virginia,
December 28, 1864, 8:30 p.m.

The Wilmington expedition has proven a gross and culpable failure. Many of the troops are back here. Delays and free talk of the object of the expedition enabled the enemy to move troops to Wilmington to defeat it. After the expedition sailed from Fort Monroe, three days of fine weather were squandered, during which the enemy was without a force to protect himself. Who is to blame will, I hope, be known.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Porter sent despatches to the Navy Department in which he complained bitterly of having been abandoned by the army just when the fort was nearly in our possession, and begged that our troops might be sent back again to coöperate, but with a different commander. As soon as I heard this I sent a messenger to Porter with a letter asking him to hold on. I assured him that I fully sympathized with him in his disappointment, and that I would send the same troops back with a different commander, with some reinforcements to offset those which the enemy had received. I told him it would take some little time to get transportation for the additional troops; but as soon as it could be had the men should be on their way to him, and there would be no delay on my part. I selected A. H. Terry to command.

It was the 6th of January before the transports could be got ready and the troops aboard. They sailed from Fort Monroe on that day. The object and destination of the second expedition were at the time kept a secret to all except a few in the Navy Department and in the army to whom it was necessary to impart the information. General Terry had not the slightest idea of where he was going or what he was to do. He simply knew that he was going to sea and that he had his orders with him, which were to be opened when out at sea.

He was instructed to communicate freely with Porter and have entire harmony between army and navy, because the work before them would require the best efforts of both arms of the service. They arrived off Beaufort on the 8th. A heavy storm, however, prevented a landing at Fort Fisher until the 13th. The navy prepared itself for attack about as before, and at the same time assisted the army in landing, this time five miles away. Only iron-clads fired at first, the object being to draw the fire of the enemy's guns so as to ascertain their positions. This object being accomplished, they then let in their shots thick and fast. Very soon the guns were all silenced, and the fort showed evident signs of being much injured.

Terry deployed his men across the peninsula as had been done before, and at two o'clock on the following morning was up within two miles of the fort, with a respectable abatis in front of his line. His artillery was all landed on that day, the 14th. Again Curtis's brigade of Ames's division had the lead. By noon they had carried an unfinished work less than a half-mile from the fort, and turned it so as to face the other way.

Terry now saw Porter and arranged for an assault on the following day. The two commanders arranged their signals so that they could communicate with each other from time to time as they might have occasion. At daylight the fleet commenced its firing. The time agreed upon for the assault was the middle of the afternoon, and Ames, who commanded the assaulting column, moved at 3:30. Porter landed a force of sailors and marines to move against the sea-front in cooperation with Ames's assault. They were under Commander Breese, of the navy. These sailors and marines had worked their way up to within a couple of hundred yards of the fort before the assault. The signal was given and the assault was made; but the poor sailors and marines were repulsed and very badly handled by the enemy, losing two hundred and eighty killed and wounded out of their number.

Curtis's brigade charged successfully, though met by a heavy fire, some of the men having to wade through the swamp up to their waists to reach the fort. Many were wounded, of course, and some killed; but they soon reached the palisades. These they cut away, and pushed on through. The other troops then came up, Pennypacker's following Curtis, and Bell, who commanded the Third Brigade of Ames's division, following Pennypacker. But the fort was not yet captured, though the parapet was gained.

The works were very extensive. The large parapet around the work would have been but very little protection to those inside except when they were close up under it. Traverses had therefore been run until really the work was a succession of small forts inclosed by a large one. The rebels made a desperate effort to hold the fort, and had to be driven from these traverses one by one. The fight continued till long after night. Our troops gained first one traverse and then another, and by ten o'clock at night the place was carried. During this engagement the sailors, who had been repulsed in their assault on the bastion, rendered the best service they could by reinforcing Terry's northern line—thus enabling him to send a detachment to the assistance of Ames. The fleet kept up a continuous fire upon that part of the fort which was still occupied by the enemy. By means of signals they could be informed where to direct their shots.

During the succeeding nights the enemy blew up Fort Caswell, on the opposite side of Cape Fear River, and abandoned two extensive works on Smith's Island in the river.

Our captures in all amounted to 169 guns, besides small arms, with full supplies of ammunition, and 2083 prisoners. In addition to these, there were about 700 dead and wounded left there. We had lost 110 killed and 536 wounded.

In this assault on Fort Fisher, Bell, one of the brigade commanders, was killed, and two, Curtis and Pennypacker, were badly wounded.

Secretary Stanton, who was on his way back from Savannah, arrived off Fort Fisher soon after it fell. When he heard the good news he promoted all the officers of any considerable rank for their conspicuous gallantry. Terry had been nominated for major-general, but had not been confirmed. This confirmed him; and soon after I recommended him for a brigadier-generalcy in the regular army, and it was given to him for this victory.
SHERMAN'S MARCH NORTH—SHERIDAN ORDERED TO LYNCHBURG—CANBY ORDERED TO MOVE AGAINST MOBILE—MOVEMENTS OF SCHOFIELD AND THOMAS—CAPTURE OF COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA—SHERMAN IN THE CAROLINAS

WHEN news of Sherman being in possession of Savannah reached the North, distinguished statesmen and visitors began to pour in to see him. Among others who went was the Secretary of War, who seemed much pleased at the result of his campaign. Mr. Draper, the collector of customs of New York, who was with Mr. Stanton's party, was put in charge of the public property that had been abandoned and captured. Savannah was then turned over to General Foster's command to hold, so that Sherman might have his own entire army free to operate as might be decided upon in the future. I sent the chief engineer of the Army of the Potomac (General Barnard) with letters to General Sherman. He remained some time with the general, and when he returned brought back letters, one of which contained suggestions from Sherman as to what ought to be done in cooperation with him, when he should have started upon his march northward.

I must not neglect to state here the fact that I had no idea originally of having Sherman march from Savannah to Richmond, or even to North Carolina. The season was bad, the roads impassable for anything except such an army as he had, and I should not have thought of ordering such a move. I had therefore made preparations to collect transports to carry Sherman and his army around to the James River by water, and so informed him. On receiving this letter he went to work immediately to prepare for the move, but seeing that it would require a long time to collect the transports, he suggested the idea then of marching up north through the Carolinas. I was only too happy to approve this; for, if successful, it promised every advantage. His march through Georgia had thoroughly destroyed all lines of transportation in that State, and had completely cut the enemy off from all sources of supply to the west of it. If North and South Carolina were rendered helpless so far as capacity for feeding Lee's army was concerned, the Confederate garrison at Richmond would be reduced in territory, from which to draw supplies, to very narrow limits in the State of Virginia; and although that section of the country was fertile, it was already well exhausted of both forage and food. I approved Sherman's suggestion, therefore, at once.

The work of preparation was tedious, because supplies, to load the wagons for the march, had to be brought from a long distance. Sherman would now have to march through a country furnishing fewer provisions than that he had previously been operating in during his march to the sea. Besides, he was confronting, or marching toward, a force of the enemy vastly superior to any his troops had encountered on their previous march; and the territory through which he had to pass had now become of such vast importance to the very existence of the Confederate army that the most desperate efforts were to be expected in order to save it.

Sherman, therefore, while collecting the necessary supplies to start with, made arrangements with Admiral Dahlgren, who commanded that part of the navy on the South Carolina and Georgia coast, and General Foster, commanding the troops, to take positions, and hold a few points on the sea-coast, which he (Sherman) designated, in the neighborhood of Charleston.

This provision was made to enable him to fall back upon the sea-coast in case he should encounter a force sufficient to stop his onward progress. He also wrote me a letter, making suggestions as to what he would like to have done in support of his movement farther north. This letter was brought to City Point by General Barnard at a time when I happened to be going to Washington City, where I arrived on the 21st of January. I cannot tell the provision I had already made to coöperate with Sherman, in anticipation of his expected movement, better than by giving my reply to this letter.

Major-General W. T. Sherman,
Commanding Military Division of the Mississippi.

General: Your letters brought by General Barnard were received at City Point, and read with interest. Not having them with me, however, I cannot say that in this I will be able to satisfy you on all points of recommenda-

Sherman, Memoirs, II, 261

Ibid. 257

Vol. II.—18
Section. As I arrived here at 1 p.m. and must leave at 6 p.m., having in the mean time spent over three hours with the Secretary and General Halleck, I must be brief. Before your last request to have Thomas make a campaign into the heart of Alabama, I had ordered Schofield to Annapolis, Maryland, with his corps. The advance (six thousand) will reach the seaboard by the 23d, the remainder following as rapidly as railroad transportation can be procured from Cincinnati. The corps numbers over twenty-one thousand men. I was induced to do this because I did not believe Thomas could possibly be got off before spring. His pursuit of Hood indicated a sluggishness that satisfied me that he would never do to conduct one of your campaigns. The command of the advance of the pursuit was left to subordinates, whilst Thomas followed far behind. When Hood had crossed the Tennessee, and those in pursuit had reached it, Thomas had not much more than half crossed the State, from whence he returned to Nashville to take steamer for Eastport. He is possessed of excellent judgment, great coolness, and honesty, but he is not good on a pursuit. He also reported his troops fagged, and that it was necessary to equip up. This report and a determination to give the enemy no rest determined me to use his surplus troops elsewhere.

Thomas is still left, with a sufficient force surplus to go to Selma under an energetic leader. He has been telegraphed to to know whether he could go, and if so, which of the several routes he would select. No reply is yet received. Canby has been ordered to act offensively from the sea-coast to the interior, toward Montgomery and Selma. Thomas’s forces will move from the north at an early day, or some of his troops will be sent to Canby. Without further reinforcements Canby will have a moving column of twenty thousand men.

Fort Fisher, you are aware, has been captured. We have a force there of eight thousand effective. At New Bern about half the number. It is rumored, through deserters, that Wilmington also has fallen. I am inclined to believe the rumor, because on the 17th we knew the enemy were blowing up their works about Fort Caswell, and that on the 18th Terry moved on Wilmington.

If Wilmington is captured, Schofield will go there. If not, he will be sent to New Berne. In either event, all the surplus forces at the two points will move to the interior toward Goldsboro' in cooperation with your movements. From either point railroad communications can be run out, there being here abundance of rolling-stock suited to the gauge of those roads.

There have been about sixteen thousand men sent from Lee's army south. Of these you will have fourteen thousand against you, if Wilmington is not held by the enemy, casualties at Fort Fisher having overtaken about two thousand.

All these troops are subject to your orders, as you come in communication with them. They will be so instructed. From about Richmond I will watch Lee closely, and if he detaches much more, or attempts to evacuate, will pitch in.

In the mean time, should you be brought to a halt anywhere, I can send two corps of thirty thousand effective men to your support, from the troops about Richmond.

To resume: Canby is ordered to operate to the interior from the Gulf. A. J. Smith may go from the north, but I think it doubtful. A force of twenty-eight or thirty thousand will cooperate with you from New Berne or Wilmington, or both. You can call for reinforcements.

This will be handed you by Captain Hudson, of my staff, who will return with any message you may have for me. If there is anything I can do for you in the way of having supplies on shipboard, at any point on the sea-coast, ready for you, let me know it.

Yours truly,

U. S. Grant,

Lieutenant-General.

I had written on the 18th of December to General Sherman, giving him the news of the battle of Nashville. He was much pleased at the result, although, like myself, he had been very much disappointed at Thomas for permitting Hood to cross the Tennessee River and nearly the whole State of Tennessee, and come to Nashville to be attacked there. He, however, as I had done, sent Thomas a warm congratulatory letter.

On the 10th of January, 1865, the resolutions of thanks to Sherman and his army passed by Congress were approved.

Sherman, after the capture, at once had the débris in Savannah cleared up, commencing the work by removing the piling and torpedoes from the river, and taking up all other obstructions. He had then intrenched the city, so that it could be held by a small garrison. By the middle of January all his work was done, except the accumulation of supplies to commence his movements with.

He proposed to move in two columns—one from Savannah, going along by the river of the same name, and the other by roads farther east, threatening Charleston. He commenced the advance by moving his right wing to Beaufort, South Carolina, then to Pocotaligo by water. This column, in moving north, threatened Charleston, and, indeed, it was not determined at first that they would not have a force visit Charleston. South Carolina had done so much to prepare the public mind of the South for secession, and had been so active in precipitating the decision of the question before the South was fully prepared to meet it, that there was, at that time, a feeling throughout the North, and also largely entertained by people of the South, that the State of South Carolina, and Charleston, the hotbed of secession, in particular, ought to have a heavy hand laid upon them. In fact, nothing but the decisive results that followed deterred the radical portion of the people from condemning the movement because Charleston had been left out. To pass into the interior would, however, be to ensure the evacuation of the city, and its possession by the navy and Foster's troops. It is so situated between two formidable rivers that a small garrison could have held it against all odds as long as their supplies would hold out. Sherman, therefore, passed it by.

By the 1st of February all preparations were completed for the final march, Columbia, South Carolina, being the first objective; Fayetteville, North Carolina, the second; and Goldsboro', or neighborhood, the final one, unless something further should be determined upon. The right wing went from Pocotaligo, and the left from about Hardeeville, on the Savannah River, both columns taking a pretty direct route for Columbia. The cavalry, however, were to threaten Charleston on the right and Augusta on the left.

On the 15th of January Fort Fisher had fallen, news of which Sherman had received before starting out on his march. We already had New Berne, and had soon Wilmington, whose fall followed that of Fort Fisher; as did other points on the sea-coast, where the National troops were now in readiness to cooperate with Sherman's advance when he had passed Fayetteville.

On the 18th of January I ordered Canby, in command at New Orleans, to move against Mobile, Montgomery, and Selma, Alabama, for the purpose of destroying roads, machine-shops, etc. On the 8th of February I ordered Sheridan, who was in the Valley of Virginia, to push forward as soon as the weather would permit, and strike the canal west of Richmond at or about Lynchburg; and on the 20th I made the order to go to Lynchburg as soon as the roads would permit, saying:

As soon as it is possible to travel, I think you will have no difficulty about reaching Lynchburg with a cavalry force alone. From there you could destroy the railroad and canal in every direction, so as to be of no further use to the rebellion. . . . This additional raid, with one starting from East Tennessee under Stoneman, numbering about four or five thousand cavalry; one from Eastport, Mississippi, ten thousand cavalry; Canby, from Mobile Bay, with about eighteen thousand mixed troops, —these three latter pushing for Tuscaloosa, Selma, and Montgomery, and Sherman with a large army eating out the vitalis of South Carolina,—is all that will be wanted to leave nothing for the rebellion to stand upon. I would advise you to overcome great obstacles to accomplish this. Charleston was evacuated on Tuesday last.

On the 27th of February, more than a month after Canby had received his orders, I again wrote to him, saying that I was extremely anxious to hear of his being in Alabama. I notified him, also, that I had sent Grierson to take command of his cavalry, he being a very efficient officer. I further suggested that Forrest was probably in Mississippi, and if he was there, he would find him an officer of great courage and capacity, whom it would be difficult to get by. I still further informed him that Thomas had been ordered to start a cavalry force into Mississippi on the 20th of February, or as soon as possible thereafter. This force did not get off, however.
All these movements were designed to be in support of Sherman's march, the object being to keep the Confederate troops in the West from leaving there. But neither Canby nor Thomas could be got off in time. I had some time before depleted Thomas's army to reinforce Canby, for the reason that Thomas had failed to start an expedition which he had been ordered to send out, and to have the troops where they might do something. Canby seemed to be equally deliberate in all of his movements. I ordered him to go in person; but he prepared to send a detachment under another officer. General Granger had got down to New Orleans in some way or other, and I wrote Canby that he must not put him in command of troops. In spite of this he asked the War Department to assign Granger to the command of a corps.

Almost in despair of having adequate service rendered to the cause in that quarter, I wrote to Canby:

I am in receipt of a despatch ... informing me that you have made requisitions for a construction corps and material to build seventy miles of railroad. I have directed that none be sent. Thomas's army has been depleted to send a force to you, that they might be where they could act in winter, and at least detain the force the enemy had in the West. If there had been any idea of repairing railroads, it could have been done much better from the North, where we already had the troops. I expected your movements to be cooperative with Sherman's last. This has now entirely failed. I wrote to you long ago, urging you to push promptly and to live upon the country, and destroy railroads, machine-shops, etc., not to build them. Take Mobile and hold it, and push your forces to the interior—to Montgomery and to Selma. Destroy railroads, rolling-stock, and everything useful for carrying on war; and, when you have done this, take such positions as can be supplied by water. By this means alone you can occupy positions from which the enemy's roads in the interior can be kept broken.

Most of these expeditions got off finally, but too late to render any service in the direction for which they were designed.

The enemy, ready to intercept his advance, consisted of Hardee's troops and Wheeler's cavalry—perhaps less than fifteen thousand men in all; but frantic efforts were being made in Richmond, as I was sure would be the case, to retard Sherman's movements. Everything possible was being done to raise troops in the South. Lee despatched against Sherman the troops which had been sent to relieve Fort Fisher, which, including those of the other defenses of the harbor and its neighborhood, amounted, after deducting the two thousand killed, wounded, and captured, to fourteen thousand men. After Thomas's victory at Nashville, what remained of Hood's army were gathered together and forwarded as rapidly as possible to the East to coöperate with these forces; and, finally, General Joseph E. Johnston, one of the ablest commanders of the South, though not in favor with the administration (or at least with Mr. Davis), was put in command of all the troops in North and South Carolina.

Schofield arrived at Annapolis in the latter part of January; but before sending his troops to North Carolina I went with him down the coast to see the situation of affairs, as I could give fuller directions after being on the ground than I could very well have given without. We soon returned, and the troops were sent by sea to Cape Fear River. Both New Berne and Wilmington are connected with Raleigh by railroads which unite at Goldsboro'. Schofield was to land troops at Smithville, near the mouth of the Cape Fear River on the west side, and move up to secure the Wilmington and Charlotteville railroad. This column took their pontoon-bridges with them, to enable them to cross over to the island south of the city of Wilmington. A large body was sent by the north side to coöperate with them. They succeeded in taking the city on the 22d of February. I took the precaution to provide for Sherman's army, in case he should be forced to turn in toward the sea-coast before reaching North Carolina, by forwarding supplies to every place where he was liable to have to make such a deflection from his projected march. I also sent railroad rolling-stock, of which we had a great abundance, now that we were not operating the roads in Virginia. The gauge of the North Carolina railroads, being the same as the Virginia railroads, had been altered too; these cars and locomotives were ready for use there without any change.

On the 31st of January I countermanded the orders given to Thomas to move south to Alabama and Georgia. (I had previously reduced his force by sending a portion of it to Terry.) I directed, in lieu of this movement, that he should send Stoneman through East Tennessee, and push him well down toward Columbia, South Carolina, in support of Sherman. Thomas did not get Stoneman off in time, but, on the contrary, when I had supposed he was on his march in support of Sherman, I heard of his being in Louisville, Kentucky. I immediately changed the order, and directed Thomas to send him toward Lynchburg. Finally, however, on the 12th of March, he did push down through the northwestern end of South Carolina, creating some consternation. I also ordered Thomas to send the Fourth Corps (Stanley's) to Bull Gap, and to destroy no more roads east of that. I directed him to concentrate supplies at Knoxville, with a view to a probable movement of his army through that way toward Lynchburg.
Chap. XX

Goldsboro' is four hundred and twenty-five miles from Savannah. Sherman's march was without much incident until he entered Columbia, on the 17th of February. He was detained in his progress by having to repair and corduroy the roads and rebuild the bridges. There was constant skirmishing and fighting between the cavalry of the two armies, but this did not retard the advance of the infantry. Four days, also, were lost in making complete the destruction of the most important railroads south of Columbia; there was also some delay caused by the high water, and the destruction of the bridges on the line of the road. A formidable river had to be crossed near Columbia, and that in the face of a small garrison under General Wade Hampton. There was but little delay, however, further than that caused by high water in the stream. Hampton left as Sherman approached, and the city was found to be on fire.

There has since been a great deal of acrimony displayed in discussions of the question as to who set Columbia on fire. Sherman denies it on the part of his troops, and Hampton denies it on the part of the Confederates. One thing is certain: as soon as our troops took possession, they at once proceeded to extinguish the flames to the best of their ability with the limited means at hand. In any case, the example set by the Confederates in burning the village of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, a town which was not garrisoned, would seem to make a defense of the act of firing the seat of government of the State most responsible for the conflict then raging not imperative.

The Confederate troops having vacated the city, the mayor took possession, and sallied forth to meet the commander of the National forces for the purpose of surrendering the town, making terms for the protection of property, etc. Sherman paid no attention at all to the overture, but pushed forward and took the town without making any conditions whatever with its citizens. He then, however, coöperated with the mayor in extinguishing the flames and providing for the people who were rendered destitute by this destruction of their homes. When he left there he even gave the mayor five hundred head of cattle to be distributed among the citizens, to tide them over until some arrangement could be made for their future supplies. He remained in Columbia until the roads, public buildings, workshops, and everything that could be useful to the enemy were destroyed. While at Columbia Sherman learned for the first time that what remained of Hood's army was confronting him, under the command of General Beauregard.

Charleston was evacuated on the 18th of February, and Foster garrisoned the place. Wilmington was captured on the 22d. Columbia and Cheraw, farther north, were regarded as so secure from invasion that the wealthy people of Charleston and Augusta had sent much of their valuable property to these two points to be stored. Among the goods sent there were valuable carpets, tons of old Madeira, silverware, and furniture. I am afraid much of these goods fell into the hands of our troops. There was found at Columbia a large amount of powder, some artillery, small arms, and fixed ammunition. These, of course, were among the articles destroyed. While here Sherman also learned of Johnston's restoration to command. The latter was given, as already stated, all troops in North and South Carolina. After the completion of the destruction of public property about Columbia, Sherman proceeded on his march, and reached Cheraw without any special opposition and without incident to relate. The railroads, of course, were thoroughly destroyed on the way. Sherman remained a day or two at Cheraw, and finally, on the 6th of March, crossed his troops over the Pedee and advanced straight for Fayetteville. Hardee and Hampton were there, and barely escaped. Sherman reached Fayetteville on the 11th of March. He had despatched scouts from Cheraw with letters to General Terry, at Wilmington, asking him to send a steamer with some supplies of bread, clothing, and other articles which he enumerated. The scouts got through successfully, and a boat was sent with the mail and such articles for which Sherman had asked as were in store at Wilmington. Unfortunately, however, those stores did not contain clothing.

Four days later, on the 15th, Sherman left Fayetteville for Goldsboro'. The march now had to be made with great caution, for he was approaching Lee's army and nearing the country that still remained open to the enemy. Besides, he was confronting all that he had had to confront in his previous march up to that point, reinforced by the garrisons along the road and by what remained of Hood's army. Frantic appeals were made to the people to come in voluntarily and swell the ranks of our foe. I presume, however, that Johnston did not have in all over thirty-five or forty thousand men. The people had grown tired of the war, and desertions from the Confederate army were much more numerous than the voluntary accessions.

There was some fighting at Averysboro' on the 16th between Johnston's troops and Sherman's, with some loss; and at Bentonville on the 19th and 21st of March, but Johnston withdrew from the contest before the morning of the 22d. Sherman's loss in these last engagements, in killed, wounded, and missing, was about sixteen hundred. Sherman's troops at last reached Goldsboro' on the 23d of the month and went into bivouac; and there his men were destined to have a long rest. Schofield was there to meet him with the troops which had been sent to Wilmington.

Sherman was no longer in danger. He had Johnston confronting him, but with an army much inferior to his own, both in numbers and in morale. He had Lee to the north of him with a force largely superior; but I was holding Lee with a still greater force, and had he made his escape and gotten down to reinforce Johnston, Sherman, with the reinforcements he now had from Schofield and Terry, would have been able to hold the Confederates at bay for an indefinite period. He was near the sea-shore, with his back to it, and our navy occupied the harbois. He had a railroad to both Wilmington and New Berne, and his flanks were thoroughly protected by streams, which intersect that part of the country and deepen as they approach the sea. Then, too, Sherman knew that if Lee should escape me I would be on his heels, and he and Johnston together would be crushed in one blow if they attempted to make a stand. With the loss of their capital, it is doubtful whether Lee's army would have amounted to much as an army when it reached North Carolina. Johnston's army was demoralized by constant defeat, and would hardly have made an offensive movement, even if they could have been induced to remain on duty. The men of both Lee's and Johnston's armies were, like their brethren of the North, as brave as men can be; but no man is so brave that he may not meet such defeats and disasters as to discourage him and dampen his ardor for any cause, no matter how just he deems it.
Chap. XX

CHAPTER XXI

ARRIVAL OF THE PEACE COMMISSIONERS—LINCOLN AND THE PEACE COMMISSIONERS—AN ANECDOTE OF LINCOLN—THE WINTER BEFORE PETERSBURG —SHERIDAN DESTROYS THE RAILROAD—GORDON CARRIES THE PICKET-LINE—PARKE RECAPTURES
THE LINE—THE BATTLE OF WHITE OAK ROAD

On the last of January, 1865, peace commissioners from the so-called Confederate States presented themselves on our lines around Petersburg, and were immediately conducted to my headquarters at City Point. They proved to be Alexander H. Stephens, Vice-President of the Confederacy, Judge Campbell, Assistant Secretary of War, and R. M. T. Hunter, formerly United States Senator and then a member of the Confederate Senate.

It was about dark when they reached my headquarters, and I at once conducted them to the steamer Mary Martin, a Hudson River boat which was very comfortably fitted up for the use of passengers. I at once communicated by telegraph with Washington, and informed the Secretary of War and the President of the arrival of these commissioners, and that their object was to negotiate terms of peace between the United States and, as they termed it, the Confederate government. I was instructed to retain them at City Point until the President, or some one whom he would designate, should come to meet them. They remained several days as guests on board the boat. I saw them quite frequently, though I have no recollection of having had any conversation whatever with them on the subject of their mission. It was something I had nothing to do with, and I therefore did not wish to express any views on the subject. For my own part, I never had admitted, and never was ready to admit, that they were the representatives of a government. There had been too great a waste of blood and treasure to concede anything of the kind. As long as they remained there, however, our relations were pleasant, and I found them all very agreeable gentlemen. I directed the captain to furnish them with the best the boat afforded, and to minister to their comfort in every way possible. No guard was placed over them and no restriction was put upon their movements; nor was there any pledge asked that they would not abuse the privileges extended to them. They were permitted to leave the boat when they felt like it, and did so, coming up on the bank and visiting me at my headquarters.

I had never met any of these gentlemen before the war, but knew them well by reputation and through their public services, and I had been a particular admirer of Mr. Stephens. I had always supposed that he was a very small man, but when I saw him in the dusk of the evening I was very much surprised to find so large a man as he seemed to be. When he got down on to the boat I found that he was wearing a coarse gray woolen overcoat, a manufacture that had been introduced into the South during the rebellion. The cloth was thicker than anything of the kind I had ever seen, even in Canada. The overcoat extended nearly to his feet, and was so large that it gave him the appearance of being an average-sized man. He took this off when he reached the cabin of the boat, and I was struck with the apparent change in size, in the coat and out of it.

After a few days, about the 2d of February, I received a despatch from Washington, directing me to send the commissioners to Hampton Roads to meet the President and a member of the Cabinet. Mr. Lincoln met them there and had an interview of short duration. It was not a great while after they met that the President visited me at City Point. He spoke of his having met the commissioners, and said he had told them that there would be no use in entering into any negotiations unless they would recognize, first, that the Union as a whole must be forever preserved; and, second, that slavery must be abolished. If they were willing to concede these two points, then he was ready to enter into negotiations, and was almost willing to hand them a blank sheet of paper with his signature attached, for them to fill in the terms upon which they were willing to live with us in the Union and be one people. He always showed a generous and kindly spirit toward the Southern people, and I never heard him abuse an enemy. Some of the cruel things said about President Lincoln, particularly in the North, used to pierce him to the heart; but never in my presence did he evince a revengeful disposition—and I saw a great deal of him at City Point, for he seemed glad to get away from the cares and anxieties of the capital.

Right here I might relate an anecdote of Mr. Lincoln. It was on the occasion of his visit to me just after he had talked with the peace commissioners at Hampton Roads. After a little conversation he asked me if I had seen that overcoat of Stephens's. I replied that I had. "Well," said he, "did you see him take it off?" I said yes. "Well," said he, "didn't you think it was the biggest shuck and the littlest ear that ever you did see?" Long afterward I told this story to the Confederate General J. B. Gordon, at the time a member of the Senate. He repeated it to Stephens, and, as I heard afterward, Stephens laughed immoderately at the simile of Mr. Lincoln.

The rest of the winter, after the departure of the peace commissioners, passed off quietly and uneventfully, except for two or three little incidents. On one occasion during this period, while I was visiting Washington City for the purpose of conferring with the administration, the enemy's cavalry under General Wade Hampton, passing our extreme left and then going to the south, got in east of us. Before their presence was known they had driven off a large number of beef-cattle that were grazing in that section. It was a fair capture, and they were sufficiently needed by the Confederates. It was only retaliating for what we had done, sometimes for many weeks at a time, when out of supplies—taking what the Confederate army otherwise would have gotten. As appears in this book, on one single occasion we captured five thousand head of cattle which were crossing the Mississippi River. near Port Hudson on their way from Texas to supply the Confederate army in the East.

One of the most anxious periods of my experience during the rebellion was the last few weeks before Petersburg. I felt that the situation of the Confederate army was such that they would try to make an escape at the earliest practicable moment, and I was afraid, every morning, that I would awake from my sleep to hear that Lee had gone, and that nothing was left but a picket-line. He had his railroad by the way of Danville south, and I was afraid that he was running off his men and all stores and ordnance except such as it would be necessary to carry with him for his immediate defense. I knew he could move much more lightly and more rapidly than I, and that, if he got the start, he would leave me behind, so that we would have the same army to fight again farther south—and the war might be prolonged another year.

I was led to this fear by the fact that I could not see how it was possible for the Confederates to hold out much longer where they were. There is no doubt that Richmond would have been evacuated much sooner than it was if it had not been that it was the capital of the so-called Confederacy, and the fact of evacuating the capital would, of course, have had a very demoralizing effect upon the Confederate army. When it was evacuated (as we shall see further on) the Confederacy at once began to crumble and fade away. Then, too, desertions were taking place not only among those who were with General Lee in the neighborhood of their capital, but throughout the whole Confederacy. I remember that, in a conversation with me on one occasion long prior to this, General Butler remarked that the Confederates would find great difficulty in getting more men for their army; possibly adding, though I am not certain as to this, "unless they should arm the slave."

The South, as we all knew, were conscripting every able-bodied man between the ages of eighteen and forty-five; and now they had passed a law for the further conscription of boys from fourteen to eighteen, calling them the junior reserves, and men from forty-five to sixty, to be called the senior reserves. The latter were to hold the necessary points not in immediate danger, and especially those in the rear. General Butler, in alluding to this conscription, remarked that they were thus "robbing both the cradle and the grave," an expression which I afterward used in writing a letter to Mr. Washburn.

It was my belief that, while the enemy could get no more recruits, they were losing at least a regiment a day, taking it throughout the entire army, by desertions alone. Then, by casualties of war, sickness, and other natural causes, their losses were much heavier. It was a mere question of arithmetic to calculate how long they could hold out while that rate of depletion was going on. Of course, long before their army would be thus reduced to nothing the army which we had in the field would have been able to capture theirs. Then, too, I knew from the great number of desertions that the men who had fought so bravely, so gallantly, and so long for the cause which they believed in—and as earnestly, I take it, as our men believed in the cause for which they were fighting—had lost hope and become despondent. Many of them were making application to be sent North, where they might get employment until the war was over, when they could return to their Southern homes.

For these and other reasons I was naturally very impatient for the time to come when I could commence the spring campaign, which I thoroughly believed would close the war.

There were two considerations I had to observe, however, and which detained me. One was the fact that the winter had been one of heavy rains, and the roads were impassable for artillery and teams. It was necessary to wait until they had dried sufficiently to enable us to move the wagon-trains and artillery necessary to the efficiency of an army operating in the enemy's country. The other consideration was that General Sheridan, with the cavalry of the Army of the Potomac, was operating on the north side of the James River, having come down from the Shenandoah. It was necessary that I should have his cavalry with me, and I was therefore obliged to wait until he could join me south of the James River.

Let us now take account of what he was doing.

On the 5th of March I had heard from Sheridan. He had met Early between Staunton and Charlottesville and defeated him, capturing nearly his entire command. Early and some of his officers escaped by finding refuge in the neighboring houses or in the woods.

On the 12th I heard from him again. He had turned east, to come to White House. He could not go to Lynchburg as ordered, because the rains had been so very heavy and the streams were so very much swollen. He had a pontoon-train with him, but it would not reach half-way across some of the streams, at their then stage of water, which he would have to get over in going south as first ordered.

I had supplies sent around to White House for him, and kept the depot there open until he arrived. We had intended to abandon it, because the James River had now become our base of supplies.

Sheridan had about ten thousand cavalry with him, divided into two divisions commanded respectively by Custer and Devin. General Merritt was acting as chief of cavalry. Sheridan moved very light, carrying only four days' provisions with him, with a larger supply of coffee, salt, and other small rations, and very little else besides ammunition. They stopped at Charlottesville and commenced tearing up the railroad back toward Lynchburg. He also sent a division along the James River Canal to destroy locks, culverts, etc. All mills and factories along the lines of march of his troops were destroyed also.

Sheridan had in this way consumed so much time that his making a march to White House was now somewhat hazardous. He determined, therefore, to fight his way along the railroad and canal till he was as near to Richmond as it was possible to get, or until attacked. He did this, destroying the canal as far as Goochland, and the railroad to a point as near Richmond as he could get. On the 10th he was at Columbia. Negroes had joined his column to the number of two thousand or more, and they assisted considerably in the work of destroying the railroads and the canal. His cavalry was in as fine a condition as when he started, because he had been able to find plenty of forage. He had captured most of Early's horses and picked up a good many others on the road. When he reached Ashland he was assailed by the enemy in force. He resisted their assault with part of his command, moved quickly across the South and North Anna, going north, and reached White House safely on the 19th.

The time for Sherman to move had to be fixed with reference to the time he could get away from Goldsboro', where he then was. Supplies had to be got up to him which would last him through a long march, as there would probably not be much to be obtained in the country through which he would pass. I had to arrange, therefore, that he should start from where he was, in the neighborhood of Goldsboro', on the 18th of April, the earliest day at which he supposed he could be ready.

Sherman was anxious that I should wait where I was until he could come up and make a sure thing of it; but I had determined to move as soon as the roads and weather would admit of my doing so. I had been tied down somewhat in the matter of fixing any time at my pleasure for starting, until Sheridan, who was on his way from the Shenandoah Valley to join me, should arrive, as both his presence and that of his cavalry were necessary to the execution of the plans which I had in mind. However, having arrived at White House on the 19th of March, I was enabled to make my plans.

Prompted by my anxiety lest Lee should get away some night before I was aware of it, and, having the lead of me, push into North Carolina to join with Johnston in attempting to crush out Sherman, I had, as early as the 1st of the month of March, given instructions to the troops around Petersburg to keep a sharp lookout to see that such a movement should not escape their notice, and to be ready to strike at once if it was undertaken.

It is now known that early in the month of March Mr. Davis and General Lee had a consultation about the situation of affairs in and about Richmond and Petersburg, and they both agreed that these places were no longer tenable for them, and that they must get away as soon as possible. They, too, were waiting for dry roads, or a condition of the roads which would make it possible to move.

General Lee, in aid of his plan of escape, and to secure a wider opening to enable them to reach the Danville road with greater security than he would have in the way the two armies were situated, determined upon an assault upon the right of our lines around Petersburg. The night of the 24th of March was fixed upon for this assault, and General Gordon was assigned to the execution of the plan. The point between Fort Stedman and Battery No. 10, where our lines were closest together, was selected as the point of his attack. The attack was to be made at night, and the troops were to get possession of the higher ground in the rear, where they supposed we had intrenchments, then sweep to the right and left, create a panic in the lines of our army, and force me to contract my lines. Lee hoped this would detain me a few days longer and give him an opportunity of escape. The plan was well conceived and the execution of it very well done indeed, up to the point of carrying a portion of our line.
Gordon assembled his troops, under the cover of night, at the point at which they were to make their charge, and got possession of our picket-line, entirely without the knowledge of the troops inside of our main line of intrenchments; this reduced the distance he would have to charge over to not much more than fifty yards. For some time before, the deserters had been coming in with great frequency, often bringing their arms with them; and this the Confederate general knew. Taking advantage of this knowledge, he sent his pickets, with their arms, creeping through to ours, as if to desert. When they got to our lines they at once took possession and sent our pickets to the rear as prisoners. In the main line our men were sleeping serenely, as if in great security. This plan was to have been executed and much damage done before daylight; but the troops that were to reinforce Gordon had to be brought from the north side of the James River, and, by some accident on the railroad on their way over, they were detained for a considerable time; so that it got to be nearly daylight before they were ready to make the charge.

The charge, however, was successful and almost without loss, the enemy passing through our lines between Fort Stedman and Battery No. 10. Then, turning to the right and left, they captured the fort and the battery, with all the arms and troops in them. Continuing the charge, they also carried Batteries 11 and 12 to our left, which they turned toward City Point.

Meade happened to be at City Point that night, and this break in his line cut him off from all communication with his headquarters. Parke, however, commanding the Ninth Corps when this breach took place, telegraphed the facts to Meade's headquarters, and, learning that the general was away, assumed command himself, and with commendable promptitude made all preparations to drive the enemy back. General Tidball gathered a large number of pieces of artillery, and planted them in rear of the captured works so as to sweep the narrow space of ground between the lines very thoroughly. Hartranft was soon out with his division, as also was Willcox. Hartranft to the right of the breach headed the rebels off in that direction and rapidly drove them back into Fort Stedman. On the other side they were driven back into the intrenchments which they had captured, and Batteries 11 and 12 were retaken by Willcox early in the morning.

Parke then threw a line around outside of the captured fort and batteries, and communication was once more established. The artillery fire was kept up so continuously that it was impossible for the Confederates to retreat, and equally impossible for reinforcements to join them. They all, therefore, fell captives into our hands. This effort of Lee's cost him about four thousand men, and resulted in their killing, wounding, and capturing about two thousand of ours.

After the recapture of the batteries taken by the Confederates, our troops made a charge and carried the enemy's intrenched picket-line, which they strengthened and held. This, in turn, gave us but a short distance to charge over when our attack came to be made a few days later.

The day that Gordon was making dispositions for this attack (24th of March) I issued my orders for the movement to commence on the 29th. Ord, with three divisions of infantry and Mackenzie's cavalry, was to move in advance on the night of the 27th, from the north side of the James River, and take his place on our extreme left, thirty miles away. He left Weitzel with the rest of the Army of the James to hold Bermuda Hundred and the north of the James River. The Engineer Brigade was to be left at City Point, and Parke's corps in the lines about Petersburg.

Ord was at his place promptly. Humphreys and Warren were then on our extreme left with the Second and Fifth corps. They were directed, on the arrival of Ord, and on his getting into position in their places, to cross Hatcher's Run and extend out west toward Five Forks, the object being to get into a position from which we could strike the South Side railroad and ultimately the Danville railroad. There was considerable fighting in taking up these new positions for the Second and Fifth corps, in which the Army of the James had also to participate somewhat, and the losses were quite severe.

This was what was known as the battle of White Oak road.
CHAPTER XXII

INTERVIEW WITH SHERIDAN—GRAND MOVEMENT OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC—SHERIDAN'S ADVANCE ON FIVE FORKS—BATTLE OF FIVE FORKS—PARKE AND WRIGHT STORM THE ENEMY'S LINES—BATTLES BEFORE PETERSBURG

SHERIDAN reached City Point on the 26th of March. His horses, of course, were jaded, and many of them had lost their shoes. A few days of rest were necessary to recuperate the animals and also to have them shod and put in condition for moving. Immediately on General Sheridan's arrival at City Point I prepared his instructions for the move which I had decided upon. The movement was to commence on the 29th of the month.

After reading the instructions I had given him Sheridan walked out of my tent, and I followed to have some conversation with him by himself—not in the presence of anybody else, even of a member of my staff. In preparing his instructions I contemplated just what took place; that is to say, capturing Five Forks, driving the enemy from Petersburg and Richmond, and terminating the contest before separating from the enemy. But the nation had already become restless and discouraged at the prolongation of the war, and many believed that it would never terminate except by compromise.

Knowing that unless my plan proved an entire success it would be interpreted as a disastrous defeat, I provided in these instructions that in a certain event he was to cut loose from the Army of the Potomac and his base of supplies, and, living upon the country, proceed south by the way of the Danville railroad, or near it, across the Roanoke, get in the rear of Johnston, who was guarding that road, and coöperate with Sherman in destroying Johnston; then with these combined forces to help carry out the instructions which Sherman already had received, to act in coöperation with the armies around Petersburg and Richmond.

I saw that after Sheridan had read his instructions he seemed somewhat disappointed at the idea, possibly, of having to cut loose again from the Army of the Potomac, and place himself between the two main armies of the enemy. I said to him, "General, this portion of your instructions I have put in merely as a blind;" and gave him the reason for doing so, heretofore described. I told him that, as a matter of fact, I intended to close the war right here with this movement, and that he should go no farther. His face at once brightened up, and slapping his hand on his leg he said, "I am glad to hear it, and we can do it."

Sheridan was not, however, to make his movement against Five Forks until he got further instructions from me.

One day, after the movement I am about to describe had commenced, and when his cavalry was on our extreme left and far to the rear, south, Sheridan rode up to where my headquarters were then established, at Dabney's Mills. He met some of my staff-officers outside, and was highly jubilant over the prospects of success, giving reasons why he believed this would prove the final and successful effort. Although my chief of staff had urged very strongly that we return to our position about City Point and in the lines around Petersburg, he asked Sheridan to come in to see me and say to me what he had been saying to them. Sheridan felt a little modest about giving his advice where it had not been asked; so one of my staff came in and told me that Sheridan had what they considered important news, and suggested that I send for him. I did so, and was glad to see the spirit of confidence with which he was imbued. Knowing, as I did from experience, of what great value that feeling of confidence by a commander was, I determined to make a movement at once, although, on account of the rains which had fallen after I had started out, the roads were still very heavy. Orders were given accordingly.

Finally the 29th of March came, and fortunately, there having been a few days free from rain, the surface of the ground was dry, giving indications that the time had come when we could move. On that date I moved out with all the army available after leaving sufficient force to hold the line about Petersburg. It soon set in raining again, however, and in a very short time the roads became practically impassable for teams, and almost so for cavalry. Sometimes a horse or mule would be standing apparently on firm ground, when all at once one foot would sink, and as he commenced scrambling to catch himself, all his feet would sink, and he would have to be drawn by hand out of the quicksands so common in that part of Virginia and other Southern States. It became necessary, therefore, to build corduroy roads every foot of the way as we advanced, to move our artillery upon. The army had become so accustomed to this kind of work, and were so well prepared for it, that it was done very rapidly. The next day (March 30th) we had made sufficient progress to the southwest to warrant me in starting Sheridan with his cavalry over by Dinwiddie, with instructions to then come up by the road leading northwest to Five Forks, thus menacing the right of Lee’s line.

This movement was made for the purpose of extending our lines to the west as far as practicable toward the enemy’s extreme right, or Five Forks. The column moving detached from the army still in the trenches was, excluding the cavalry, very small. The forces in the trenches were themselves extending to the left flank. Warren was on the extreme left when the extension began, but Humphreys was marched around later and thrown into line between him and Five Forks.

My hope was that Sheridan would be able to carry Five Forks, get on the enemy’s right flank and rear, and force them to weaken their center to protect their right, so that an assault in the center might be successfully made. General Wright’s corps had been designated to make this assault, which I intended to order as soon as information reached me of Sheridan’s success. He was to move under cover as close to the enemy as he could get.

It is natural to suppose that Lee would understand my design to be to get up to the South Side and ultimately to the Danville railroad, as soon as he had heard of the movement commenced on the 29th. These roads were so important to his very existence while he remained in Richmond and Petersburg, and of such vital importance to him even in case of retreat, that naturally he would make most strenuous efforts to defend them. He did on the 30th send Pickett with five brigades to reinforce Five Forks. He also sent around to the right of his army some two or three other divisions, besides directing that other troops be held in readiness on the north side of the James River to come over on call. He came over himself to superintend in person the defense of his right flank.

Sheridan moved back to Dinwiddie Court House on the night of the 30th, and then took a road leading northwest to Five Forks. He had only his cavalry with him. Soon encountering the rebel cavalry, he met with a very stout resistance. He gradually drove them back, however, until in the neighborhood of Five Forks. Here he had to encounter other troops besides those he had been contending with, and was forced to give way.

In this condition of affairs he notified me of what had taken place, and stated that he was falling back toward Dinwiddie gradually and slowly, and asked me to send Wright's corps to his assistance. I replied to him that it was impossible to send Wright's corps, because that corps was already in line close up to the enemy, where we should want to assault when the proper time came, and was, besides, a long distance from him; but the Second (Humphreys's) and Fifth (Warren's) corps were on our extreme left and a little to the rear of it, in a position to threaten the left flank of the enemy at Five Forks, and that I would send Warren.
PETERSBURG & FIVE FORKS

From Surveys under the direction of Gen. A. A. Humphreys, Maj. of Engineers. By Command of Gen. G. C. Meigs, Chief of Engineers. 1867.

Accordingly orders were sent to Warren to move at once that night (the 31st) to Dinwiddie Court House and put himself in communication with Sheridan as soon as possible, and report to him. He was very slow in moving, some of his troops not starting until after five o'clock next morning. When he did move it was done very deliberately, and on arriving at Gravelly Run he found the stream swollen from the recent rains, so that he regarded it as not fordable. Sheridan, of course, knew of his coming, and being impatient to get the troops up as soon as possible, sent orders to him to hasten. He was also hastened, or at least ordered to move up rapidly, by General Meade. He now felt that he could not cross that creek without bridges, and his orders were changed to move so as to strike the pursuing enemy in flank or get in their rear; but he was so late in getting up that Sheridan determined to move forward without him. However, Ayres's division of Warren's corps reached him in time to be in the fight all day, most of the time separated from the remainder of the Fifth Corps and fighting directly under Sheridan.

Warren reported to Sheridan about eleven o'clock on the 1st, but the whole of his troops were not up so as to be much engaged until late in the afternoon. Griffin's division, in backing to get out of the way of a severe cross-fire of the enemy, was found marching away from the fighting. This did not continue long, however; the division was brought back, and with Ayres's division did most excellent service during the day. Crawford's division of the same corps had backed still farther off, and although orders were sent repeatedly to bring it up, it was late before it finally got to where it could be of material assistance. Once there it did very excellent service.

Sheridan succeeded by the middle of the afternoon, or a little later, in advancing up to the point from which to make his designed assault upon Five Forks itself. He was very impatient to make the assault and have it all over before night, because the ground he occupied would be untenable for him in bivouac during the night. Unless the assault was made and was successful he would be obliged to return to Dinwiddie Court House, or even farther than that, for the night.

It was at this junction of affairs that Sheridan wanted to get Crawford's division in hand, and he also wanted Warren. He sent staff-officer after staff-officer in search of Warren, directing that general to report to him, but they were unable to find him. At all events, Sheridan was unable to get that officer to him. Finally he went himself. He issued an order relieving Warren and assigning Griffin to the command of the Fifth Corps. The troops were then brought up and the assault successfully made.

I was so much dissatisfied with Warren's dilatory movements in the battle of White Oak road, and in his failure to reach Sheridan in time, that I was very much afraid that at the last moment he would fail Sheridan. He was a man of fine intelligence, great earnestness, quick perception, and could make his dispositions as quickly as any officer, under difficulties where he was forced to act. But I had before discovered a defect which was beyond his control, that was very prejudicial to his usefulness in emergencies like the one just before us. He could see every danger at a glance before he had encountered it. He would not only make preparations to meet the danger which might occur, but he would inform his commanding officer what others should do while he was executing his move.

I had sent a staff-officer to General Sheridan to call his attention to these defects, and to say that, as much as I liked General Warren, now was not a time when we could let our personal feelings for any one stand in the way of success; and if his removal was necessary to success, not to hesitate. It was upon that authorization that Sheridan removed Warren. I was very sorry that it had been done, and regretted still more that I had not long before taken occasion to assign him to another field of duty.

It was dusk when our troops under Sheridan went over the parapets of the enemy. The two armies were mingled together there for a time in such manner that it was almost a question which one was going to demand the surrender of the other. Soon, however, the enemy broke and ran in every direction, some six thousand prisoners, besides artillery and small arms in large quantities, falling into our hands. The flying troops were pursued in different directions, the cavalry and Fifth Corps under Sheridan pursuing the larger body, which moved northwest.

This pursuit continued until about nine o'clock at night, when Sheridan halted his troops, and, knowing the importance to him of the part of the enemy's line which had been captured, returned, sending the Fifth Corps across Hatcher's Run to just southwest of Petersburg, and facing them toward it. Merritt, with the cavalry, stopped and bivouacked west of Five Forks.

This was the condition which affairs were in on the night of the 1st of April. I then issued orders for an assault by Wright and Parke at four o'clock on the morning of the 2d. I also ordered the Second Corps, General Humphreys, and General Ord with the Army of the James, on the left, to hold themselves in readiness to take any advantage that could be taken from weakening in their front.

I notified Mr. Lincoln at City Point of the success of the day; in fact, I had reported to him during the day and evening as I got news, because he was so much interested in the movements taking place that I wanted to relieve his mind as much as I could. I notified Weitzel on the north side of the James River, directing him, also, to keep close up to the enemy, and take advantage of the withdrawal of troops from there to promptly enter the city of Richmond.

I was afraid that Lee would regard the possession of Five Forks as of so much importance that he would make a last desperate effort to retake it, risking everything upon the cast of a single die. It was for this reason that I had ordered the assault to take place at once, as soon as I had received the news of the capture of Five Forks. The corps commanders, however, reported that it was so dark that the men could not see to move, and it would be impossible to make the assault then.
But we kept up a continuous artillery fire upon the enemy around the whole line, including that north of the James River, until it was light enough to move, which was about a quarter to five in the morning.

At that hour Parke's and Wright's corps moved out as directed, brushed the abatis from their front as they advanced under a heavy fire of musketry and artillery, and went without flinching directly on till they mounted the parapets and threw themselves inside of the enemy's line. Parke, who was on the right, swept down to the right and captured a very considerable length of line in that direction; but at that point the outer was so near the inner line which closely enveloped the city of Petersburg that he could make no advance forward, and, in fact, had a very serious task to turn the lines which he had captured to the defense of his own troops and to hold them; but he succeeded in this.

Wright swung around to his left and moved to Hatcher's Run, sweeping everything before him. The enemy had traverses in rear of his captured line, under cover of which he made something of a stand, from one to another, as Wright moved on; but the latter met no serious obstacle. As you proceed to the left the outer line becomes gradually much farther from the inner one, and along about Hatcher's Run they must be nearly two miles apart. Both Parke and Wright captured a considerable amount of artillery and some prisoners—Wright about three thousand of them.

In the mean time Ord and Humphreys, in obedience to the instructions they had received, had succeeded by daylight, or very early in the morning, in capturing the intrenched picket-lines in their front; and before Wright got up to that point, Ord had also succeeded in getting inside of the enemy’s intrenchments. The Second Corps soon followed; and the outer works of Petersburg were in the hands of the National troops, never to be wrenched from them again. When Wright reached Hatcher’s Run, he sent a regiment to destroy the South Side railroad just outside of the city.

My headquarters were still at Dabney’s saw-mills. As soon as I received the news of Wright’s success I sent despatches announcing the fact to all points around the line, including the troops at Bermuda Hundred and those on the north side of the James, and to the President at City Point. Further despatches kept coming in, and as they did I sent the additional news to these points. Finding at length that they were all in, I mounted my horse to join the troops who were inside the works. When I arrived there I rode my horse over the parapet just as Wright’s three thousand prisoners were coming out. I was soon joined inside by General Meade and his staff.

Lee made frantic efforts to recover at least part of the lost ground. Parke on our right was repeatedly assaulted, but repulsed every effort. Before noon Longstreet was ordered up from the north side of the James River, thus bringing the bulk of Lee’s army around to the support of his extreme right. As soon as I learned this I notified Weitzel and directed him to keep up close to the enemy, and to have Hartsuff, commanding the Bermuda Hundred front, to do the same thing, and if they found any break to go in; Hartsuff especially should do so, for this would separate Richmond and Petersburg.

Sheridan, after he had returned to Five Forks, swept down to Petersburg, coming in on our left. This gave us a continuous line from the Appomattox River below the city to the same river above. At eleven o'clock, not having heard from Sheridan, I reinforced Parke with two brigades from City Point. With this additional force he completed his captured works for better defense, and built back from his right, so as to protect his flank. He also carried in and made an abatis between himself and the enemy. Lee brought additional troops and artillery against Parke even after this was done, and made several assaults with very heavy losses.

The enemy had, in addition to their intrenched line close up to Petersburg, two inclosed works outside of it, Fort Gregg and Fort Whitworth. We thought it had now become necessary to carry them by assault. About one o'clock in the day, Fort Gregg was assaulted by Foster's division of the Twenty-fourth Corps (Gibbon's), supported by two brigades from Ord's command. The battle was desperate, and the National troops were repulsed several times; but it was finally carried, and immediately the troops in Fort Whitworth evacuated the place. The guns of Fort Gregg were turned upon the retreating enemy, and the commanding officer, with some sixty of the men of Fort Whitworth, surrendered.

I had ordered Miles in the morning to report to Sheridan. In moving to execute this order he came upon the enemy at the intersection of the White Oak road and the Claiborne road. The enemy fell back to Sutherland's station on the South Side road and were followed by Miles. This position, naturally a strong and defensible one, was also strongly intrenched. Sheridan now came up, and Miles asked permission from him to make the assault, which Sheridan gave. By this time Humphreys had got through the outer works in his front, and came up also and assumed command over Miles, who commanded a division in his corps. I had sent an order to Humphreys to turn to his right and move toward Petersburg. This order he now got, and started off, thus leaving Miles alone. The latter made two assaults, both of which failed, and he had to fall back a few hundred yards.

Hearing that Miles had been left in this position, I directed Humphreys to send a division back to his relief. He went himself.

Sheridan, before starting to sweep down to Petersburg, had sent Merritt with his cavalry to the west to attack some Confederate cavalry that had assembled there. Merritt drove them north to the Appomattox River. Sheridan then took the enemy at Sutherland's station on the reverse side from where Miles was, and the two together captured the place, with a large number of prisoners and some pieces of artillery, and put the remainder, portions of three Confederate corps, to flight. Sheridan followed, and drove them until night, when further pursuit was stopped. Miles bivouacked for the night on the ground which he, with Sheridan, had carried so handsomely by assault. I cannot explain the situation here better than by giving my despatch to City Point that evening:
EVACUATION OF PETERSBURG

BOYDTON ROAD, NEAR PETERSBURG,
April 2, 1865, 4:40 p.m.

COLONEL T. S. BOWERS,
City Point:

We are now up and have a continuous line of troops, and in a few hours will be intrenched from the Appomattox below Petersburg to the river above. Heth's and Wilcox's divisions—such part of them as were not captured—were cut off from town, either designedly on their part or because they could not help it. Sheridan with the cavalry and Fifth Corps is above them. Miles's division, Second Corps, was sent from the White Oak road to Sutherland's station on the South Side railroad, where he met them, and at last accounts was engaged with them. Not knowing whether Sheridan would get up in time, General Humphreys was sent with another division from here. The whole captures since the army started out gunning will amount to not less than twelve thousand men and probably fifty pieces of artillery. I do not know the number of men and guns accurately, however. . . . I think the President might come out and pay us a visit to-morrow.

U. S. Grant,

Lieutenant-General.

During the night of April 2d our line was intrenched from the river above to the river below. I ordered a bombardment to be commenced the next morning at 5 A.M., to be followed by an assault at six o'clock; but the enemy evacuated Petersburg early in the morning.
CHAPTER XXIII

THE CAPTURE OF PETERSBURG—MEETING PRESIDENT LINCOLN IN PETERSBURG—THE CAPTURE OF RICHMOND—PURSUING THE ENEMY—VISIT TO SHERIDAN AND MEADE

GENERAL MEADE and I entered Petersburg on the morning of the 3d and took a position under cover of a house which protected us from the enemy's musketry, which was flying thick and fast there. As we would occasionally look around the corner we could see the streets and the Appomattox bottom, presumably near the bridge, packed with the Confederate army. I did not have artillery brought up, because I was sure Lee was trying to make his escape, and I wanted to push immediately in pursuit. At all events, I had not the heart to turn the artillery upon such a mass of defeated and fleeing men, and I hoped to capture them soon.

Soon after the enemy had entirely evacuated Petersburg, a man came in who represented himself to be an engineer of the Army of Northern Virginia. He said that Lee had for some time been at work preparing a strong inclosed intrenchment, into which he would throw himself when forced out of Petersburg, and fight his final battle there; that he was actually at that time drawing his troops from Richmond, and falling back into this prepared work. This statement was made to General Meade and myself when we were together. I had already given orders for the movement up the south side of the Appomattox for the purpose of heading off Lee; but Meade was so much impressed by this man's story that he thought we ought to cross the Appomattox there at once and move against Lee in his new position. I knew that Lee was no fool, as he would have been to have put himself and his army between two formidable streams like the James and Appomattox rivers, and between two such armies as those of the Potomac and the James. Then these streams coming together as they did to the east of him, it would be only necessary to close up in the west to have him thoroughly cut off from all supplies or possibility of reinforcement. It would only have been a question of days,—and not many of them,—if he had taken the position assigned to him by the so-called engineer, when he would have been obliged to surrender his army. Such is one of the ruses resorted to in war to deceive your antagonist. My judgment was that Lee would necessarily have to evacuate Richmond, and that the only course for him to pursue would be to follow the Danville road. Accordingly my object was to secure a point on that road south of Lee, and I told Meade this. He suggested that if Lee was going that way we should follow him. My reply was that we did not want to follow him; we wanted to get ahead of him and cut him off, and if he would only stay in the position he (Meade) believed him to be in at that time, I wanted nothing better; that when we got in possession of the Danville railroad, at its crossing of the Appomattox River, if we still found him between the two rivers, all we had to do was to move eastward and close him up; that we would then have all the advantage we could possibly have by moving directly against him from Petersburg, even if he remained in the position assigned him by the engineer officer.

I had held most of the command aloof from the intrenchments, so as to start them out on the Danville road early in the morning, supposing that Lee would be gone during the night. During the night I strengthened Sheridan by sending him Humphreys's corps.

Lee, as we now know, had advised the authorities at Richmond, during the day, of the condition of affairs, and told them it would be impossible for him to hold out longer than night, if he could hold out that long. Davis was at church when he received Lee's despatch. The congregation was dismissed with the notice that there would be no evening service. The rebel government left Richmond about two o'clock in the afternoon of the 2d.

At night Lee ordered his troops to assemble at Amelia Court House, his object being to get away, join Johnston, if possible, and try to crush Sherman before I could get there. As soon as I was sure of this I notified Sheridan, and directed him to move out on the Danville railroad to the south side of the Appomattox River as speedily as possible. He replied that he already had some of his command nine miles out. I then ordered the rest of the Army of the Potomac under Meade to follow the same road in the morning. Parke's corps followed by the same road, and the Army of the James was directed to follow the road which ran alongside of the South Side railroad to Burke's Station, and to repair the railroad and telegraph as they proceeded. That road was a 5-feet gauge, while our rolling-stock was all of the 4 feet 8½ inches gauge; consequently the rail on one side of the track had to be taken up throughout the whole length and relaid so as to conform to the gauge of our cars and locomotives.

Mr. Lincoln was at City Point at the time, and had been for some days. I would have let him know what I contemplated doing, only, while I felt a strong conviction that the move was going to be successful, yet it might not prove so; and then I would have only added another to the many disappointments he had been suffering for the past three years. But when we started out he saw that we were moving for a purpose, and bidding us God-speed, remained there to hear the result.

The next morning after the capture of Petersburg I telegraphed Mr. Lincoln, asking him to ride out there and see me, while I would await his arrival. I had started all the troops out early in the morning, so that after the National army left Petersburg there was not a soul to be seen, not even an animal in the streets. There was absolutely no one there except my staff-officers and, possibly, a small escort of cavalry. We had selected the piazza of a deserted house, and occupied it until the President arrived.

About the first thing that Mr. Lincoln said to me, after warm congratulations for the victory and thanks both to myself and to the army which had accomplished it, was, "Do you know, general, that I have had a sort of a sneaking idea for some days that you intended to do something like this?" Our movements having been successful up to this point, I no longer had any object in concealing from the President all my movements, and the objects I had in view. He remained for some days near City Point, and I communicated with him frequently and fully by telegraph.

Mr. Lincoln knew that it had been arranged for Sherman to join me at a fixed time, to coöperate in the destruction of Lee's army. I told him that I had been very anxious to have the Eastern armies vanquish their old enemy, who had so long resisted all their repeated and gallant attempts to subdue them or drive them from their capital. The Western armies had been in the main successful until they had conquered all the territory from the Mississippi River to the State of North Carolina, and were now almost ready to knock at the back door of Richmond, asking admittance. I said to him that if the Western armies should be even upon the field, operating against Richmond and Lee, the credit would be given to them for the capture, by politicians and non-combatants from the section of country which those troops hailed from. It might lead to disagreeable bickerings between members of Congress of the East and those of the West in some of their debates. Western members might be throwing it up to the members of the East that in the suppression of the rebellion they were not able to capture an army, or to accomplish much in the way of contributing toward that end, but had to wait until the Western armies had conquered all the territory south and west of them, and then come on to help them capture the only army they had been engaged with.

Mr. Lincoln said he saw that now, but had never thought of it before, because his anxiety was so great that he did not care where the aid came from so the work was done.

The Army of the Potomac has every reason to be proud of its four years' record in the suppression of the rebellion. The army it had to fight was the protection to the capital of a people which was attempting to found a nation upon the territory of the United States. Its loss would be the loss of the cause. Every energy, therefore, was put forth by the Confederacy to protect and maintain their capital. Everything else would go if it went. Lee's army had to be strengthened to enable it to maintain its position, no matter what territory was wrested from the South in another quarter.

I never expected any such bickering as I have indicated between the soldiers of the two sections; and fortunately there has been none between the politicians. Possibly I am the only one who thought of the liability of such a state of things in advance.

When our conversation was at an end Mr. Lincoln mounted his horse and started on his return to City Point, while I and my staff started to join the army, now a good many miles in advance. Up to this time I had not received the report of the capture of Richmond.

Soon after I left President Lincoln I received a despatch from General Weitzel which notified me that he had taken possession of Richmond at about 8:15 o'clock in the morning of that day (the 3d), and that he had found the city on fire in two places. The city was in the most utter confusion. The authorities had taken the precaution to empty all the liquor into the gutter, and to throw out the provisions which the Confederate government had left, for the people to gather up. The city had been deserted by the authorities, civil and military, without any notice whatever that they were about to leave. In fact, up to the very hour of the evacuation the people had been led to believe that Lee had gained an important victory somewhere around Petersburg.

Weitzel's command found evidence of great demoralization in Lee's army, there being still a great many men and even officers in the town. The city was on fire. Our troops were directed to extinguish the flames, which they finally succeeded in doing. The fire had been started by someone connected with the retreating army. All authorities deny that it was authorized, and I presume it was the work of excited men who were leaving what they regarded as their capital, and may have felt that it was better to destroy it than have it fall into the hands of their enemy. Be that as it may, the National troops found the city in flames, and used every effort to extinguish them.

The troops that had formed Lee's right, a great many of them, were cut off from getting back into Petersburg, and were pursued by our cavalry so hotly and closely that they threw away caissons, ammunition, clothing, and almost everything to lighten their loads, and pushed along up the Appomattox River until finally they took water and crossed over.

I left Mr. Lincoln and started, as I have already said, to join the command, which halted at Sutherland's station, about nine miles out. We had still time to march as much farther, and time was an object; but the roads were bad, and the trains belonging to the advance corps had blocked up the road so that it was impossible to get on. Then, again, our cavalry had struck some of the enemy and were pursuing them; and the orders were that the roads should be given up to the cavalry whenever they appeared. This caused further delay.

General Wright, who was in command of one of the corps which were left back, thought to gain time by letting his men go into bivouac and trying to get up some rations for them, and clearing out the road, so that when they did start they would be uninterrupted. Humphreys, who was far ahead, was also out of rations. They did not succeed in getting them up through the night; but the Army of the Potomac, officers and men, were so elated by the reflection that at last they were following up a victory to its end that they preferred marching without rations to running a possible risk of letting the enemy elude them. So the march was resumed at three o'clock in the morning.

Merritt's cavalry had struck the enemy at Deep Creek, and driven them north to the Appomattox, where, I presume, most of them were forced to cross.

On the morning of the 4th I learned that Lee had ordered rations up from Danville for his famishing army, and that they were to meet him at Farmville. This showed that Lee had already abandoned the idea of following the railroad down to Danville, but had determined to go farther west, by the way of Farmville. I notified Sheridan of this and directed him to get possession of the road before the supplies could reach Lee. He responded that he had already sent Crook's division to get upon the road between Burkesville and Jetersville, then to face north and march along the road upon the latter place; and he thought Crook must be there now. The bulk of the army moved directly for Jetersville by two roads.

After I had received the despatch from Sheridan saying that Crook was on the Danville road, I immediately ordered Meade to make a forced march with the Army of the Potomac, and to send Parke's corps across from the road they were on to the South Side railroad, to fall in the rear of the Army of the James and to protect the railroad which that army was repairing as it went along.

Our troops took possession of Jetersville, and in the telegraph-office they found a despatch from Lee, ordering two hundred thousand rations from Danville. The despatch had not been sent, but Sheridan sent a special messenger with it to Burkesville and had it forwarded from there. In the mean time, however, despatches from other sources had reached Danville, and they knew there that our army was on the line of the road; so that they sent no further supplies from that quarter.

At this time Merritt and Mackenzie, with the cavalry, were off between the road which the Army of the Potomac was marching on and the Appomattox River, and were attacking the enemy in flank. They picked up a great many prisoners and forced the abandonment of some property.

Lee intrenched himself at Amelia Court House, and also his advance north of Jetersville, and sent his troops out to collect forage. The country was very poor and afforded but very little. His foragers scattered a great deal; many of them were picked up by our men, and many others never returned to the Army of Northern Virginia.

Griffin's corps was intrenched across the railroad south of Jetersville, and Sheridan notified me of the situation. I again ordered Meade up with all despatch, Sheridan having but the one corps of infantry, with a little cavalry, confronting Lee's entire army. Meade, always prompt in obeying orders, now pushed forward with great energy, although he was himself sick and hardly able to be out of bed. Humphreys moved at two, and Wright at three o'clock in the morning, without rations, as I have said, the wagons being far in the rear.

I stayed that night at Wilson's Station on the South Side railroad. On the morning of the 5th I sent word to Sheridan of the progress Meade was making, and suggested that he might now attack Lee. We had now no other objective than the Confederate armies, and I was anxious to close the thing up at once.

On the 5th I marched again with Ord's command until within about ten miles of Burkesville, where I stopped to let his army pass. I then received from Sheridan the following despatch:

The whole of Lee's army is at or near Amelia Court House, and on this side of it. General Davies, whom I sent out to Painesville on their right flank, has just captured six pieces of artillery and some wagons. We can capture the Army of Northern Virginia if force enough can be thrown to this point, and then advance upon it. My cavalry was at Burkesville yesterday, and six miles beyond, on the Danville road, last night. General Lee is at Amelia Court House in person. They are out of rations, or nearly so. They were advancing up the railroad toward Burkesville yesterday, when we intercepted them at this point.

It now became a life-and-death struggle with Lee to get south to his provisions.

Sheridan, thinking the enemy might turn off immediately toward Farmville, moved Davies's brigade of cavalry out to watch him. Davies found the movement had already commenced. He attacked and drove away their cavalry, which was escorting wagons to the west, capturing and burning one hundred and eighty wagons. He also captured five pieces of artillery. The Confederate infantry then moved against him, and probably would have handled him very roughly, but Sheridan had sent two more brigades of cavalry to follow Davies, and they came to his relief in time. A sharp engagement took place between these three brigades of cavalry and the enemy's infantry, but the latter was repulsed.

Meade himself reached Jetersville about two o'clock in the afternoon, but in advance of all his troops. The head of Humphreys's corps followed in about an hour afterward. Sheridan stationed the troops as they came up, at Meade's request, the latter still being very sick. He extended two divisions of this corps off to the west of the road to the left of Griffin's corps, and one division to the right. The cavalry by this time had also come up, and they were put still farther off to the left, Sheridan feeling certain that there lay the route by which the enemy intended to escape. He wanted to attack, feeling that, if time was given, the enemy would get away; but Meade prevented this, preferring to wait till his troops were all up.

At this juncture Sheridan sent me a letter which had been handed to him by a colored man, with a note from himself saying that he wished I was there myself. The letter was dated Amelia Court House, April 5th, and signed by Colonel Taylor. It was to his mother, and showed the demoralization of the Confederate army. Sheridan's note also gave me the information, as here related, of the movements of that day. I received a second message from Sheridan on the 5th, in which he urged more emphatically the importance of my presence. This was brought to me by a scout in gray uniform. It was written on tissue-paper and wrapped up in tin-foil such as chewing-tobacco is folded in. This was a precaution taken so that if the scout should be captured he could take this tin-foil out of his pocket and, putting it into his mouth, chew it. It would cause no surprise at all to see a Confederate soldier chewing tobacco. It was nearly night when this letter was received. I gave Ord directions to continue his march to Burkesville and there intrench himself for the night, and in the morning to move west to cut off all the roads between there and Farmville.

I then started with a few of my staff and a very small escort of cavalry, going directly through the woods, to join Meade's army. The distance was about sixteen miles; but the night being dark, our progress was slow through the woods in the absence of direct roads. However, we got to the outposts about ten o'clock in the evening, and after some little parley convinced the sentinels of our identity and were conducted in to where Sheridan was bivouacked. We talked over the situation for some little time, Sheridan explaining to me what he thought Lee was trying to do, and that Meade's orders, if carried out, moving to the right flank, would give him the coveted opportunity of escaping us and putting us in rear of him.

We then together visited Meade, reaching his headquarters about midnight. I explained to Meade that we did not want to follow the enemy—we wanted to get ahead of him; and that his orders would allow the enemy to escape; and besides that,
I had no doubt that Lee was moving right then. Meade changed his orders at once. They were now given for an advance on Amelia Court House, at an early hour in the morning, as the army then lay; that is, the infantry being across the railroad, most of it to the west of the road, with the cavalry swung out still farther to the left.
CHAPTER XXIV

BATTLE OF SAILOR'S CREEK—ENGAGEMENT AT FARMVILLE—CORRESPONDENCE WITH GENERAL LEE—SHERIDAN INTERCEPTS THE ENEMY

The Appomattox, going westward, takes a long sweep to the southwest from the neighborhood of the Richmond and Danville railroad bridge, and then trends northwesterly. Sailor's Creek, an insignificant stream, running northward, empties into the Appomattox between the High Bridge and Jetersville. Near the High Bridge the stage-road from Petersburg to Lynchburg crosses the Appomattox River, also on a bridge. The railroad runs on the north side of the river to Farmville, a few miles west, and from there, recrossing, continues on the south side of it. The roads coming up from the southeast to Farmville cross the Appomattox River there on a bridge and run on the north side, leaving the Lynchburg and Petersburg railroad well to the left.

Lee, in pushing out from Amelia Court House, availed himself of all the roads between the Danville road and Appomattox River to move upon, and never permitted the head of his columns to stop because of any fighting that might be going on in his rear. In this way he came very near succeeding in getting to his provision-trains and eluding us with at least part of his army.

As expected, Lee's troops had moved during the night before, and our army in moving upon Amelia Court House soon encountered them. There was a good deal of fighting before Sailor's Creek was reached. Our cavalry charged in upon a body of theirs which was escorting a wagon-train in order to get it past our left. A severe engagement ensued, in which we captured many prisoners, and many men also were killed and wounded. There was as much gallantry displayed by some of the Confederates in these little engagements as was displayed at any time during the war, notwithstanding the sad defeats of the past week.

The armies finally met on Sailor's Creek, when a heavy engagement took place, in which infantry, artillery, and cavalry were all brought into action. Our men on the right, as they were brought in against the enemy, came in on higher ground, and upon his flank, giving us every advantage to be derived from the lay of the country. Our firing was also very much more rapid, because the enemy commenced his retreat westward, and in firing as he retreated had to turn around every time he fired. The enemy's loss was very heavy, as well in killed and wounded as in captures. Some six general officers fell into our hands in this engagement, and seven thousand men were made prisoners. This engagement was commenced in the middle of the afternoon of the 6th, and the retreat and pursuit were continued until nightfall, when the armies bivouacked upon the ground where the night had overtaken them.
When the move toward Amelia Court House had commenced that morning, I ordered Wright's corps, which was on the extreme right, to be moved to the left past the whole army, to take the place of Griffin's, and ordered the latter at the same time to move by and place itself on the right. The object of this movement was to get the Sixth Corps (Wright's) next to the cavalry, with which they had formerly served so harmoniously and so efficiently in the Valley of Virginia.

The Sixth Corps now remained with the cavalry and under Sheridan's direct command until after the surrender.

Ord had been directed to take possession of all the roads southward between Burkesville and the High Bridge. On the morning of the 6th he sent Colonel Washburn, with two infantry regiments, with instructions to destroy High Bridge and to return rapidly to Burkesville Station; and he prepared himself to resist the enemy there. Soon after Washburn had started Ord became a little alarmed as to his safety, and sent Colonel Read, of his staff, with about eighty cavalrmen, to overtake him and bring him back. Very shortly after this he heard that the head of Lee's column had got up to the road between him and where Washburn now was, and attempted to send reinforcements, but the reinforcements could not get through. Read, however, had got through ahead of the enemy. He rode on to Farmville, and was on his way back again when he found his return cut off, and Washburn confronting apparently the advance of Lee's army. Read drew his men up into line of battle, his force now consisting of less than six hundred men, infantry and cavalry, and rode along their front, making a speech to his men to inspire them with the same enthusiasm that he himself felt. He then gave the order to charge. This little band made several charges, of course unsuccessful ones, but inflicted a loss upon the enemy more than equal to their own entire number. Colonel Read fell mortally wounded, and then Washburn; and at the close of the conflict nearly every officer of the command and most of the rank and file had been either killed or wounded. The remainder then surrendered. The Confederates took this to be only the advance of a larger column which had headed them off, and so stopped to intrench; so that this gallant band of six hundred had checked the progress of a strong detachment of the Confederate army.

This stoppage of Lee's column no doubt saved to us the trains following. Lee himself pushed on and crossed the wagon-road bridge near the High Bridge, and attempted to destroy it. He did set fire to it, but the flames had made but little headway when Humphreys came up with his corps and drove away the rear-guard which had been left to protect it while it was being burned up. Humphreys forced his way across with some loss, and followed Lee to the intersection of the road crossing at Farmville with the one from Petersburg. Here Lee held a position which was very strong naturally, besides being intrenched. Humphreys was alone, confronting him all through the day, and in a very hazardous position. He put on a bold face, however, and assaulted with some loss, but was not assaulted in return.

Our cavalry had gone farther south by the way of Prince Edward’s Court House, along with the Fifth Corps (Griffin’s), Ord falling in between Griffin and the Appomattox. Crook’s division of cavalry and Wright’s corps pushed on west of Farmville. When the cavalry reached Farmville they found that some of the Confederates were in ahead of them, and had already got their trains of provisions back to that point; but our troops were in time to prevent them from securing anything to eat, although they succeeded in again running the trains off, so that we did not get them for some time. These troops retreated to the north side of the Appomattox to join Lee, and succeeded in destroying the bridge after them. Considerable fighting ensued there between Wright’s corps and a portion of our cavalry and the Confederates, but finally the cavalry forded the stream and drove them away. Wright built a footbridge for his men to march over on, and then marched out to the junction of the roads to relieve Humphreys, arriving there that night. I had stopped the night before at Burkesville Junction. Our troops were then pretty much all out of the place, but we had a field-hospital there, and Ord’s command was extended from that point toward Farmville.

Here I met Dr. Smith, a Virginian and an officer of the regular army, who told me that in a conversation with General Ewell, one of the prisoners and a relative of his, Ewell had said that when we had got across the James River he knew their cause was lost, and it was the duty of their authorities to make the best terms they could while they still had a right to claim concessions. The authorities thought differently, however. Now the cause was lost and they had no right to claim anything. He said, further, that for every man that was killed after this in the war somebody was responsible, and it would be but very little better than murder. He was not sure that Lee would consent to surrender his army without being able to consult with the President, but he hoped he would.

I rode in to Farmville on the 7th, arriving there early in the day. Sheridan and Ord were pushing through, away to the south. Meade was back toward the High Bridge, and Humphreys confronting Lee as before stated. After having gone into bivouac at Prince Edward's Court House, Sheridan learned that seven trains of provisions and forage were at Appomattox, and determined to start at once and capture them; and a forced march was necessary in order to get there before Lee's army could secure them. He wrote me a note telling me this. This fact, together with the incident related the night before by Dr. Smith, gave me the idea of opening correspondence with General Lee on the subject of the surrender of his army. I therefore wrote to him on this day as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE U. S.,
5 P.M., April 7, 1865.

GENERAL R. E. LEE,
Commanding Confederate States Armies:

The result of the last week must convince you of the hopelessness of further resistance on the part of the Army of Northern Virginia in this struggle. I feel that it is so, and regard it as my duty to shift from myself the responsibility of any further effusion of blood, by asking of you the surrender of that portion of the Confederate States army known as the Army of Northern Virginia.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.
Lee replied on the evening of the same day as follows:

April 7, 1865.

General: I have received your note of this date. Though not entertaining the opinion you express on the hopelessness of further resistance on the part of the Army of Northern Virginia, I reciprocate your desire to avoid useless effusion of blood, and therefore, before considering your proposition, ask the terms you will offer on condition of its surrender.

R. E. Lee,
Lieutenant-General U. S. Grant,
Commanding Armies of the U. S.

This was not satisfactory, but I regarded it as deserving another letter, and wrote him as follows:

April 8, 1865.

General R. E. Lee,
Commanding Confederate States Armies:

Your note of last evening, in reply to mine of same date, asking the condition on which I will accept the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, is just received. In reply I would say that, peace being my great desire, there is but one condition I would insist upon, namely, that the men and officers surrendered shall be disqualified for taking up arms again against the government of the United States until properly exchanged. I will meet you, or will designate officers to meet any officers you may name for the same purpose, at any point agreeable to you, for the purpose of arranging definitely the terms upon which the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia will be received.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Lee’s army was rapidly crumbling. Many of his soldiers had enlisted from that part of the State where they now were, and were continually dropping out of the ranks and going to their homes. I know that I occupied a hotel almost destitute of furniture at Farmville, which had probably been used as a Confederate hospital. The next morning when I came out I found a Confederate colonel there, who reported to me and said that he was the proprietor of that house, and that he was a colonel of a regiment that had been raised in that neighborhood. He said that when he came along past home, he found that he was the only man of the regiment remaining with Lee's army, so he just dropped out, and now wanted to surrender himself. I told him to stay there and he would not be molested. That was one regiment which had been eliminated from Lee's force by this crumbling process.

Although Sheridan had been marching all day, his troops moved with alacrity and without any straggling. They began to see the end of what they had been fighting four years for. Nothing seemed to fatigue them. They were ready to move without rations and travel without rest until the end. Straggling had entirely ceased, and every man was now a rival for the front. The infantry marched about as rapidly as the cavalry could.

Sheridan sent Custer with his division to move south of Appomattox Station, which is about five miles southwest of the Court House, to get west of the trains and destroy the roads to the rear. They got there the night of the 8th, and succeeded partially; but some of the trainmen had just discovered the movement of our troops and succeeded in running off three of the trains. The other four were held by Custer.
The head of Lee's column came marching up there on the morning of the 9th, not dreaming, I suppose, that there were any Union soldiers near. The Confederates were surprised to find our cavalry had possession of the trains. However, they were desperate and at once assaulted, hoping to recover them. In the mêlée that ensued they succeeded in burning one of the trains, but not in getting anything from it. Custer then ordered the other trains run back on the road toward Farmville, and the fight continued.

So far only our cavalry and the advance of Lee's army were engaged. Soon, however, Lee's men were brought up from the rear, no doubt expecting they had nothing to meet but our cavalry. But our infantry had pushed forward so rapidly that by the time the enemy got up they found Griffin's corps and the Army of the James confronting them. A sharp engagement ensued, but Lee quickly set up a white flag.
CHAPTER XXV

NEGOTIATIONS AT APPOMATTOX—INTERVIEW WITH LEE AT MCLEAN'S HOUSE—THE TERMS OF SURRENDER—LEE'S SURRENDER—INTERVIEW WITH LEE AFTER THE SURRENDER

ON the 8th I had followed the Army of the Potomac in rear of Lee. I was suffering very severely with a sick-headache, and stopped at a farm-house on the road some distance in rear of the main body of the army. I spent the night in bathing my feet in hot water and mustard, and putting mustard-plasters on my wrists and the back part of my neck, hoping to be cured by morning. During the night I received Lee's answer to my letter of the 8th, inviting an interview between the lines on the following morning. But it was for a different purpose from that of surrendering his army, and I answered him as follows:

Headquarters Armies of the U. S.,
April 9, 1865.

General R. E. Lee,
Commanding Confederate States Armies:

Your note of yesterday is received. I have no authority to treat on the subject of peace; the meeting proposed for 10 A.M. to-day could lead to no good. I will state, however, General, that I am equally anxious for peace with yourself, and the whole North entertains the same feeling. The terms upon which peace can be had are well understood. By the South laying down their arms they will hasten that most desirable event, save thousands of human lives, and hundreds of millions of property not yet destroyed. Sincerely hoping that all our difficulties may be settled without the loss of another life, I subscribe myself, etc.,

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

I proceeded at an early hour in the morning, still suffering with the headache, to get to the head of the column. I was not more than two or three miles from Appomattox Court House at the time, but to go direct I would have to pass through Lee's army, or a portion of it. I had therefore to move south in order to get upon a road coming up from another direction.

When the white flag was put out by Lee, as already described, I was in this way moving toward Appomattox Court House, and consequently could not be communicated with immediately, and be informed of what Lee had done. Lee, therefore, sent a flag to the rear to advise Meade, and one to the front to Sheridan, saying that he had sent a message to me for the purpose of having a meeting to consult about the surrender of his army, and asked for a suspension of hostilities until I could be communicated with. As they had heard nothing of this until the fighting had got to be severe and all going against Lee, both of these commanders hesitated very considerably about suspending hostilities at all. They were afraid it was not in good faith, and we had the Army of Northern Virginia where it could not escape except by some deception. They, however, finally consented to a suspension of hostilities for two hours, to give an opportunity of communicating with me in that time, if possible. It was found that, from the route I had taken, they would probably not be able to communicate with me and get an answer back within the time fixed unless the messenger should pass through the rebel lines.

Lee, therefore, sent an escort with the officer bearing this message through his lines to me:

April 9, 1865.

GENERAL: I received your note of this morning on the picket-line, whither I had come to meet you and ascertain definitely what terms were embraced in your proposal of yesterday with reference to the surrender of this army. I now ask an interview, in accordance with the offer contained in your letter of yesterday, for that purpose.

R. E. LEE,
General.

When the officer reached me I was still suffering with the sick-headache; but the instant I saw the contents of the note I was cured. I wrote the following note in reply and hastened on:

April 9, 1865.

GENERAL R. E. LEE,
Commanding Confederate States Armies:

Your note of this date is but this moment (11: 50 a.m.) received, in consequence of my having passed from the Richmond and Lynchburg road to the Farmville and Lynchburg road. I am at this writing about four miles west of Walker's Church, and will push forward to the front for the purpose of meeting you. Notice sent to me on this road where you wish the interview to take place will meet me.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

I was conducted at once to where Sheridan was located, with his troops drawn up in line of battle facing the Confederate army near by. They were very much excited, and expressed their view that this was all a ruse employed to enable the Confederates to get away. They said they believed that Johnston was marching up from North Carolina now, and Lee was moving to join him; and they would whip the rebels where they now were in five minutes if I would only let them go in. But I had no doubt about the good faith of Lee, and pretty soon was conducted to where he was. I found him at the house of a Mr. McLean, at Appomattox Court House, with Colonel Marshall, one of his staff-officers, awaiting my arrival. The head of his column was occupying a hill, on a portion of which was an apple-orchard, beyond a little valley which separated it from that on the crest of which Sheridan's forces were drawn up in line of battle to the south.

Before stating what took place between General Lee and myself I will give all there is of the story of the famous apple-tree.

Wars produce many stories of fiction, some of which are told until they are believed to be true. The war of the rebellion was no exception to this rule, and the story of the apple-tree is one of those fictions based on a slight foundation of fact. As I have said, there was an apple-orchard on the side
APPOMATTOX COURT HOUSE.

From Surveys
under the direction of Bvt. Brig. Gen. N. Michler,
Maj. of Engineers,
By Command of
Bvt. Maj. Gen'l A. A. Humphreys,
Brig. Gen'l & Chief of Engineers.

1867.
of the hill occupied by the Confederate forces. Running diagonally up the hill was a wagon-road, which at one point ran very near one of the trees, so that the wheels of vehicles had on that side cut off the roots of this tree, leaving a little embankment. General Babcock, of my staff, reported to me that when he first met General Lee he was sitting upon this embankment with his feet in the road below and his back resting against the tree. The story had no other foundation than that. Like many other stories, it would be very good if it were only true.

I had known General Lee in the old army, and had served with him in the Mexican war; but did not suppose, owing to the difference in our age and rank, that he would remember me; while I would more naturally remember him distinctly, because he was the chief of staff of General Scott in the Mexican war.

When I had left camp that morning I had not expected so soon the result that was then taking place, and consequently was in rough garb. I was without a sword, as I usually was when on horseback in the field, and wore a soldier's blouse for a coat, with the shoulder-strap's of my rank to indicate to the army who I was. When I went into the house I found General Lee. We greeted each other, and after shaking hands took our seats. I had my staff with me, a good portion of whom were in the room during the whole of the interview.

What General Lee's feelings were I do not know. As he was a man of much dignity, with an impassible face, it was impossible to say whether he felt inwardly glad that the end had finally come, or felt sad over the result and was too manly to show it. Whatever his feelings, they were entirely concealed from my observation; but my own feelings, which had been quite jubilant on the receipt of his letter, were sad and depressed. I felt like anything rather than rejoicing at the downfall of a foe who had fought so long and valiantly, and had suffered so much for a cause, though that cause was, I believe, one of the worst for which a people ever fought, and one for which there was the least excuse. I do not question, however, the sincerity of the great mass of those who were opposed to us.

General Lee was dressed in a full uniform which was entirely new, and was wearing a sword of considerable value, very likely the sword which had been presented by the State of Virginia; at all events, it was an entirely different sword from the one that would ordinarily be worn in the field. In my rough traveling-suit, the uniform of a private with the straps of a lieutenant-general, I must have contrasted very strangely with a man so handsomely dressed, six feet high, and of faultless form. But this was not a matter that I thought of until afterward.

We soon fell into a conversation about old army times. He remarked that he remembered me very well in the old army; and I told him that as a matter of course I remembered him perfectly, but from the difference in our rank and years (there being about sixteen years' difference in our ages) I had thought it very likely that I had not attracted his attention sufficiently to be remembered by him after such a long interval. Our conversation grew so pleasant that I almost forgot the object of our meeting. After the conversation had run on in this style for some time, General Lee called my attention to the object of our meeting, and said that he had asked for this interview for the purpose of getting from me the terms I proposed to give his army. I said that I meant merely that his army should lay down their arms, not to take them up again during the continuance of the war unless duly and properly exchanged. He said that he had so understood my letter.

Then we gradually fell off again into conversation about matters foreign to the subject which had brought us together. This continued for some little time, when General Lee again interrupted the course of the conversation by suggesting that the terms I proposed to give his army ought to be written out. I called to General Parker, secretary of my staff, for writing-materials, and commenced writing out the following terms:

APPOMATTOX C. H., VIRGINIA,
April 9, 1865.

GENERAL R. E. Lee,
Commanding Confederate States Armies:

GENERAL: In accordance with the substance of my letter to you of the 8th inst., I propose to receive the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia on the following terms, to wit:

Rolls of all the officers and men to be made in duplicate, one copy to be given to an officer designated by me, the other to be retained by such officer or officers as you may designate. The officers to give their individual paroles not to take up arms against the Government of the United States until properly exchanged, and each company or regimental commander sign a like parole for the men of their commands.

The arms, artillery, and public property to be parked and stacked, and turned over to the officer appointed by me to receive them. This will not embrace the side-arms of the officers, nor their private horses or baggage. This done, each officer and man will be allowed to return to their homes, not to be disturbed by United States authority so long as they observe their parole and the laws in force where they may reside.

Very respectfully,

U. S. Grant,

Lieutenant-General.

When I put my pen to the paper I did not know the first word that I should make use of in writing the terms. I only knew what was in my mind, and I wished to express it clearly, so that there could be no mistaking it. As I wrote on, the thought occurred to me that the officers had their own private horses and effects, which were important to them, but of no value to us; also that it would be an unnecessary humiliation to call upon them to deliver their side-arms.

No conversation—not one word—passed between General Lee and myself, either about private property, side-arms, or kindred subjects. He appeared to have no objections to the terms first proposed; or, if he had a point to make against them, he wished to wait until they were in writing to make it. When he read over that part of the terms about side-arms, horses, and private property of the officers, he remarked, with some feeling, I thought, that this would have a happy effect upon his army.

Then, after a little further conversation, General Lee remarked to me again that their army was organized a little differently from the army of the United States (still maintaining by implication that we were two countries); that in their army the cav-allymen and artillerists owned their own horses; and he asked if he was to understand that the men who so owned their horses were to be permitted to retain them. I told him that as the terms were written they would not; that only the officers were permitted to take their private property. He then, after reading over the terms a second time, remarked that that was clear.

I then said to him that I thought this would be about the last battle of the war—I sincerely hoped so; and I said, further, I took it that most of the men in the ranks were small farmers. The whole country had been so raided by the two armies that it was doubtful whether they would be able to put in a crop to carry themselves and their families through the next winter without the aid of the horses they were then riding. The United States did not want them, and I would therefore instruct the officers I left behind to receive the paroles of his troops to let every man of the Confederate army who claimed to own a horse or mule take the animal to his home. Lee remarked again that this would have a happy effect.

He then sat down and wrote out the following letter:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
April 9, 1865.

GENERAL: I have received your letter of this date containing the terms of the surrender of the Army of Northern

---

1 There is a popular error to the effect that Generals Grant and Lee each signed the articles of surrender. The document in the form of a letter was signed only by General Grant, in the parlor of McLean's house, while General Lee was sitting in the room; and General Lee immediately wrote a letter accepting the terms, and handed it to General Grant.—F. D. G.
Virginia as proposed by you. As they are substantially the same as those expressed in your letter of the 8th instant, they are accepted. I will proceed to designate the proper officers to carry the stipulations into effect.

R. E. Lee,
General.

While duplicates of the two letters were being made, the Union generals present were severally presented to General Lee.

The much-talked-of surrendering of Lee's sword and my handing it back, this and much more that has been said about it is the purest romance. The word "sword" or "side-arms" was not mentioned by either of us until I wrote it in the terms. There was no premeditation, and it did not occur to me until the moment I wrote it down. If I had happened to omit it, and General Lee had called my attention to it, I should have put it in the terms precisely as I acceded to the provision about the soldiers retaining their horses.

General Lee, after all was completed and before taking his leave, remarked that his army was in a very bad condition for want of food, and that they were without forage; that his men had been living for some days on parched corn exclusively, and that he would have to ask me for rations and forage. I told him "Certainly," and asked for how many men he wanted rations. His answer was "About twenty-five thousand;" and I authorized him to send his own commissary and quartermaster to Appomattox Station, two or three miles away, where he could have, out of the trains we had stopped, all the provisions wanted. As for forage, we had ourselves depended almost entirely upon the country for that.

Generals Gibbon, Griffin, and Merritt were designated by me to carry into effect the paroling of Lee's troops before they should start for their homes—General Lee leaving Generals Longstreet, Gordon, and Pendleton for them to confer with in order to facilitate this work. Lee and I then separated as cordially as we had met, he returning to his own lines; and all went into bivouac for the night at Appomattox.

Soon after Lee's departure I telegraphed to Washington as follows:

Headquarters,
Appomattox Court House, Virginia,
April 9, 1865, 4:30 p.m.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War, Washington:

General Lee surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia this afternoon on terms proposed by myself. The accompanying additional correspondence will show the conditions fully.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

When news of the surrender first reached our lines our men commenced firing a salute of a hundred guns in honor of the victory. I at once sent word, however, to have it stopped. The Confederates were now our prisoners, and we did not want to exult over their downfall.

I determined to return to Washington at once, with a view to putting a stop to the purchase of supplies, and what I now deemed other useless outlay of money. Before leaving, however, I thought
I would like to see General Lee again; so next morning I rode out beyond our lines toward his headquarters, preceded by a bugler and a staff-officer carrying a white flag.

Lee soon mounted his horse, seeing who it was, and met me. We had there between the lines, sitting on horseback, a very pleasant conversation of over half an hour, in the course of which Lee said to me that the South was a big country, and that we might have to march over it three or four times before the war entirely ended, but that we would now be able to do it, as they could no longer resist us. He expressed it as his earnest hope, however, that we would not be called upon to cause more loss and sacrifice of life; but he could not foretell the result. I then suggested to General Lee that there was not a man in the Confederacy whose influence with the soldiery and the whole people was as great as his, and that if he would now advise the surrender of all the armies I had no doubt his advice would be followed with alacrity. But Lee said that he could not do that without consulting the President first. I knew there was no use to urge him to do anything against his ideas of what was right.

I was accompanied by my staff and other officers, some of whom seemed to have a great desire to go inside the Confederate lines. They finally asked permission of Lee to do so for the purpose of seeing some of their old army friends, and the permission was granted. They went over, had a very pleasant time with their old friends, and brought some of them back with them when they returned.

When Lee and I separated he went back to his lines and I returned to the house of Mr. McLean.
By Command of

FAC-SIMILE OF GENERAL GRANT'S DESPATCH ANNOUNCING THE SURRENDER OF GENERAL LEE.

At the request of the Editor, General Badeau has given the history of the despatch in the following letter:

"On Sunday afternoon, the 9th of April, 1865, as General Grant was riding to his headquarters from the farm-house in which he had received the surrender of Lee, it occurred to him that he had made no report of the event to the government. He halted at once and dismounted, with his staff, in a rough field, within the National lines. Sitting on a stone, he asked for paper. I happened to be near, and offered him my memorandum-book, such as staff-officers often carry for orders or reports in the field. He laid the book on his knee and wrote the above despatch in pencil; he handed it to me and told me to send it to the telegraph operator. I asked him if I might copy the despatch for the operator and retain the original. He assented and I rewrote the paper, the original of which is in the keeping of The Century magazine.

"Adam Badeau.

"Tannersville, N. Y., July 10, 1885."
Here the officers of both armies came in great numbers, and seemed to enjoy the meeting as much as though they had been friends separated for a long time while fighting battles under the same flag. For the time being it looked very much as if all thought of the war had escaped their minds. After an hour pleasantly passed in this way I set out on horseback, accompanied by my staff and a small escort, for Burkesville Junction, up to which point the railroad had by this time been repaired.
CHAPTER XXVI

MORALE OF THE TWO ARMIES—RELATIVE CONDITIONS OF THE NORTH AND SOUTH—PRESIDENT LINCOLN VISITS RICHMOND—ARRIVAL AT WASHINGTON—PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S ASSASSINATION—PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S POLICY

AFTER the fall of Petersburg, and when the Armies of the Potomac and the James were in motion to head off Lee's army, the morale of the National troops had greatly improved. There was no more straggling, no more rear-guards. The men who in former times had been falling back were now, as I have already stated, striving to get to the front. For the first time in four weary years they felt that they were now nearing the time when they could return to their homes with their country saved. On the other hand, the Confederates were more than correspondingly depressed. Their despondency increased with each returning day, and especially after the battle of Sailor's Creek. They threw away their arms in constantly increasing numbers, dropping out of the ranks and betaking themselves to the woods in the hope of reaching their homes. I have already instanced the case of the entire disintegration of a regiment whose colonel I met at Farmville. As a result of these and other influences, when Lee finally surrendered at Appomattox there were only 28,356 officers and men left to be paroled, and many of these were without arms. It was probably this latter fact which gave rise to the statement sometimes made, North and South, that Lee surrendered a smaller number of men than what the official figures show. As a matter of official record, and in addition to the number paroled as given above, we captured between March 29th and the date of surrender 19,132 Confederates, to say nothing of Lee's other losses, killed, wounded, and missing, during the series of desperate conflicts which marked his headlong and determined flight. The same record shows the number of cannon, including those at Appomattox, to have been 689 between the dates named.

There has always been a great conflict of opinion as to the number of troops engaged in every battle, or all important battles, fought between the sections, the South magnifying the number of Union troops engaged and belittling their own. Northern writers have fallen, in many instances, into the same error. I have often heard gentlemen who were thoroughly loyal to the Union speak of what a splendid fight the South had made and successfully continued for four years before yielding, with their twelve million of people against our twenty, and of the twelve four being colored slaves, non-combatants. I will add to their argument. We had many regiments of brave and loyal men who volunteered under great difficulty from the twelve million belonging to the South.

But the South had rebelled against the National government. It was not bound by any constitutional restrictions. The whole South was a military camp. The occupation of the colored people was to furnish supplies for the army. Conscription was resorted to early, and embraced every male from the age of eighteen to forty-five, excluding only those physically unfit to serve in the field, and the necessary number of civil officers of State and intended National government. The old and physically disabled furnished a good portion of these. The slaves, the non-combatants, one third of the whole, were required to work in the field without regard to sex, and almost without regard to age. Children from the age of eight years could and did handle the hoe; they were not much older when they began to hold the plow. The four million of colored non-combatants were equal to more than three times their number in the North, age for age and sex for sex, in supplying food from the soil to support armies. Women did not work in the fields in the North, and children attended school.

The arts of peace were carried on in the North. Towns and cities grew during the war. Inventions were made in all kinds of machinery to increase the products of a day’s labor in the shop and in the field. In the South no opposition was allowed to the government which had been set up, and which would have become real and respected if the rebellion had been successful. No rear had to be protected. All the troops in service could be brought to the front to contest every inch of ground threatened with invasion. The press of the South, like the people who remained at home, was loyal to the Southern cause.

In the North, the country, the towns, and the cities presented about the same appearance they do in time of peace. The furnaces were in blast, the shops were filled with workmen, the fields were cultivated, not only to supply the population of the North and the troops invading the South, but to ship abroad to pay a part of the expense of the war. In the North the press was free up to the point of open treason. The citizen could entertain his views and express them. Troops were necessary in the Northern States to prevent prisoners from the Southern army being released by outside force, armed, and set at large to destroy by fire our Northern cities. Plans were formed by Northern and Southern citizens to burn our cities, to poison the water supplying them, to spread infection by importing clothing from infected regions, to blow up our river and lake steamers—regardless of the destruction of innocent lives. The copperhead disreputable portion of the press magnified rebel successes and belittled those of the Union army. It was, with a large following, an auxiliary to the Confederate army. The North would have been much stronger with a hundred thousand of these men in the Confederate ranks and the rest of their kind thoroughly subdued, as the Union sentiment was in the South, than we were as the battle was fought.

As I have said, the whole South was a military camp. The colored people, four million in number, were submissive, and worked in the field and took care of the families while the able-bodied white men were at the front fighting for a cause destined to defeat. The cause was popular, and was enthusiastically supported by the young men. The conscription took all of them. Before the war was over, further conscriptions took those between fourteen and eighteen years of age as junior reserves, and those between forty-five and sixty as senior reserves. It would have been an offense directly after the war, and perhaps it would be now, to ask any able-bodied man in the South, who was between the ages of fourteen and sixty at any time during the war, whether he had been in the Confederate army. He would assert that he had, or account for his absence from the ranks. Under such circumstances it is hard to conceive how the North showed such a superiority of force in every battle fought. I know they did not.

During 1862 and 1863, John H. Morgan, a partisan officer, of no military education, but possessed of courage and endurance, operated in the rear of the Army of the Ohio in Kentucky and Tennessee. He had no base of supplies to protect, but was at home wherever he went. The army operating against the South, on the contrary, had to protect its lines of communication with the North, from which all supplies had to come to the front. Every foot of road had to be guarded by troops stationed at convenient distances apart. These guards could not render assistance beyond the points where stationed. Morgan was foot-loose, and could operate where his information—always correct—led him to believe he could do the greatest damage. During the time he was operating in this way he killed, wounded, and captured several times the number he ever had under his command at any one time. He destroyed many millions of property in addition. Places he did not attack had to be guarded as if threatened by him. Forrest, an abler soldier, operated farther west, and held from the National front quite as many men as could be spared for offensive operations. It is safe to say that more than half the National army were engaged in guarding lines of supplies, or were on leave, sick in hospital, or on detail which prevented their bearing arms. Then, again, large forces were employed where no Confederate army confronted them. I deem it safe to say that there were no large engagements where the National numbers compensated for the advantage of position and intrenchment occupied by the enemy.

While I was in pursuit of General Lee, the President went to Richmond in company with Admiral Porter, and on board his flag-ship. He found the people of that city in great consternation. The leading citizens among the people who had remained at home surrounded him, anxious that something should be done to relieve them from suspense. General Weitzel was not then in the city, having taken offices in one of the neighboring villages after his troops had succeeded in subduing the conflagration which they had found in progress on entering the Confederate capital. The President sent for him, and on his arrival a short interview was had on board the vessel, Admiral Porter and a leading citizen of Virginia being also present. After this interview the President wrote an order in about these words, which I quote from memory: "General Weitzel is authorized to permit the body calling itself the Legislature of Virginia to meet for the purpose of recalling the Virginia troops from the Confederate armies."

Immediately some of the gentlemen composing that body wrote out a call for a meeting and had it published in their papers. This call, however, went very much further than Mr. Lincoln had contemplated, as he did not say the "Legislature of Virginia," but "the body calling itself the Legislature of Virginia." Mr. Stanton saw the call as published in the Northern papers the very next issue, and took the liberty of countermanding the order authorizing any meeting of the Legislature, or any other body, and this notwithstanding the fact that the President was nearer the spot than he was.

This was characteristic of Mr. Stanton. He was a man who never questioned his own authority, and who always did in war-time what he wanted to do. He was an able constitutional lawyer and jurist; but the Constitution was not an impediment to him while the war lasted. In this latter particular I entirely agree with the view he evidently held. The Constitution was not framed with a view to any such rebellion as that of 1861-65. While it did not authorize rebellion, it made no provision against it. Yet the right to resist or suppress rebellion is as inherent as the right of self-defense, and as natural as the right of an individual to preserve his life when in jeopardy. The Constitution was therefore in abeyance for the time being, so far as it in any way affected the progress and termination of the war.

Those in rebellion against the government of the United States were not restricted by constitutional provisions, or any other, except the acts of their Congress, which was loyal and devoted to the cause for which the South was then fighting. It would be a hard case, when one third of a nation, united in rebellion against the national authority, is entirely untrammeled, that the other two thirds, in their efforts to maintain the Union intact, should be restrained by a Constitution prepared by our ancestors for the express purpose of ensuring the permanency of the confederation of the States.

After I left General Lee at Appomattox Station, I went with my staff and a few others directly to Burkesville Station on my way to Washington. The road from Burkesville back having been newly repaired, and the ground being soft, the train got off the track frequently, and, as a result, it was after midnight of the second day when I reached City Point. As soon as possible I took a despatch-boat thence to Washington city.

While in Washington I was very busy for a time in preparing the necessary orders for the new state of affairs; communicating with my different commanders of separate departments, bodies of troops, etc. But by the 14th I was pretty well through with this work, so as to be able to visit my children, who were then in Burlington, New Jersey, attending school. Mrs. Grant was with me in Washington at the time, and we were invited by President and Mrs. Lincoln to accompany them to the theater on the evening of that day. I replied to the President's verbal invitation to the effect that if we were in the city we would take great pleasure in accompanying them; but that I was very anxious to get away and visit my children, and if I could get through my work during the day I should do so. I did get through and started by the evening train on the 14th, sending Mr. Lincoln word, of course, that I would not be at the theater.
Chap. XXVI

At that time the railroad to New York entered Philadelphia on Broad Street; passengers were conveyed in ambulances to the Delaware River, and then ferried to Camden, at which point they took the cars again. When I reached the ferry, on the east side of the city of Philadelphia, I found people awaiting my arrival there; and also despatches informing me of the assassination of the President and Mr. Seward, and of the probable assassination of the Vice-President, Mr. Johnson, and requesting my immediate return.

It would be impossible for me to describe the feeling that overcame me at the news of these assassinations, more especially the assassination of the President. I knew his goodness of heart, his generosity, his yielding disposition, his desire to have everybody happy, and, above all, his desire to see all the people of the United States enter again upon the full privileges of citizenship with equality among all. I knew, also, the feeling that Mr. Johnson had expressed in speeches and conversation against the Southern people, and I feared that his course toward them would be such as to repel, and make them unwilling citizens; and if they became such they would remain so for a long while. I felt that reconstruction had been set back, no telling how far.

I immediately arranged for getting a train to take me back to Washington City; but Mrs. Grant was with me, it was after midnight, and Burlington was but an hour away. Finding that I could accompany her to our house and return about as soon as they would be ready to take me from the Philadelphia station, I went up with her and returned immediately by the same special train. The joy that I had witnessed among the people in the street and in public places in Washington when I left there had been turned to grief; the city was in reality a city of mourning. I have stated what I believed then the effect of this would be, and my judgment now is that I was right. I believe the South would have been saved from very much of the hardness of feeling that was engendered by Mr. Johnson’s course toward them during the first few months of his administration. Be this as it may, Mr. Lincoln’s assassination was particularly unfortunate for the entire nation.

Mr. Johnson’s course toward the South did engender bitterness of feeling. His denunciations of treason, and his ever-ready remark, “Treason is a crime and must be made odious,” were repeated to all those men of the South who came to him to get some assurances of safety so that they might go to work at something with the feeling that what they obtained would be secure to them. He uttered his denunciations with great vehemence, and as they were accompanied with no assurances of safety, many Southerners were driven to a point almost beyond endurance.

The President of the United States is, in a large degree, or ought to be, a representative of the feeling, wishes, and judgment of those over whom he presides; and the Southerners who read the denunciations of themselves and their people must have come to the conclusion that he uttered the sentiments of the Northern people; whereas, as a matter of fact, but for the assassination of Mr. Lincoln, I believe the great majority of the Northern peo-
The people, and the soldiers unanimously, would have been in favor of a speedy reconstruction on terms that would be the least humiliating to the people who had rebelled against their government. They believed, I have no doubt, as I did, that besides being the mildest, it was also the wisest, policy.

The people who had been in rebellion must necessarily come back into the Union, and be incorporated as an integral part of the nation. Naturally the nearer they were placed to an equality with the people who had not rebelled, the more reconciled they would feel with their old antagonists, and the better citizens they would be from the beginning. They surely would not make good citizens if they felt that they had a yoke around their necks.

I do not believe that the majority of the Northern people at that time were in favor of negro suffrage. They supposed that it would naturally follow the freedom of the negro, but that there would be a time of probation, in which the ex-slaves could prepare themselves for the privileges of citizenship before the full right would be conferred; but Mr. Johnson, after a complete revolution of sentiment, seemed to regard the South not only as an oppressed people, but as the people best entitled to consideration of any of our citizens. This was more than the people who had secured to us the perpetuation of the Union were prepared for, and they became more radical in their views. The Southerners had the most power in the executive branch, Mr. Johnson having gone to their side; and with a compact South, and such sympathy and support as they could get from the North, they felt that they would be able to control the nation at once, and already many of them acted as if they thought they were entitled to do so.

Thus Mr. Johnson, fighting Congress on the one hand, and receiving the support of the South on the other, drove Congress, which was overwhelmingly Republican, to the passing of first one measure and then another to restrict his power. There being a solid South on one side that was in accord with the political party in the North which had sympathized with the rebellion, it finally, in the judgment of Congress and of the majority of the legislatures of the States, became necessary to enfranchise the negro, in all his ignorance. In this work I shall not discuss the question of how far the policy of Congress in this particular proved a wise one. It became an absolute necessity, however, because of the foolhardiness of the President and the blindness of the Southern people to their own interest. As to myself, while strongly favoring the course that would be the least humiliating to the people who had been in rebellion, I had gradually worked up to the point where, with the majority of the people, I favored immediate enfranchisement.
CHAPTER XXVI

SHERMAN AND JOHNSTON—JOHNSTON’S SURRENDER TO SHERMAN—CAPTURE OF MOBILE—WILSON’S EXPEDITION—CAPTURE OF JEFFERSON DAVIS—GENERAL THOMAS’S QUALITIES—ESTIMATE OF GENERAL CANBY

WHEN I left Appomattox I ordered General Meade to proceed leisurely back to Burkesville Station with the Army of the Potomac and the Army of the James, and to go into camp there until further orders from me. General Johnston, as has been stated before, was in North Carolina confronting General Sherman. It could not be known positively, of course, whether Johnston would surrender on the news of Lee’s surrender; though I supposed he would; and if he did not, Burkesville Station was the natural point from which to move to attack him. The army which I could have sent against him was superior to his, and that with which Sherman confronted him was also superior; and between the two he would necessarily have been crushed or driven away. With the loss of their capital and the Army of Northern Virginia it was doubtful whether Johnston’s men would have had the spirit to stand. My belief was that he would make no such attempt; but I adopted this course as a precaution against what might happen, however improbable.

362

Simultaneously with my starting from City Point, I sent a messenger to North Carolina by boat with despatches to General Sherman, informing him of the surrender of Lee and his army; also of the terms which I had given him; and I authorized Sherman to give the same terms to Johnston if the latter chose to accept them. The country is familiar with the terms that Sherman agreed to conditionally, because they embraced a political question as well as a military one, and he would therefore have to confer with the government before agreeing to them definitely.

General Sherman had met Mr. Lincoln at City Point while visiting there to confer with me about our final movement, and knew what Mr. Lincoln had said to the peace commissioners when he met them at Hampton Roads, viz., that before he could enter into negotiations with them they would have to agree to two points—one being that the Union should be preserved, and the other that slavery should be abolished; and if they were ready to concede these two points he was almost ready to sign his name to a blank piece of paper and permit them to fill out the balance of the terms upon which we would live together. He had also seen notices in the newspapers of Mr. Lincoln's visit to Richmond, and had read in the same papers that while there he had authorized the convening of the Legislature of Virginia.

Sherman thought, no doubt, in adding to the terms that I had made with General Lee, that he was but carrying out the wishes of the President of the United States. But seeing that he was going beyond his authority, he made it a point that the terms were only conditional. They signed them with this understanding, and agreed to a truce until the terms could be sent to Washington for approval; if approved by the proper authorities there, they would then be final; if not approved, then he would give due notice before resuming hostilities. As the world knows, Sherman, from being one of the most popular generals of the land (Congress having even gone so far as to propose a bill providing for a second lieutenant-general for the purpose of advancing him to that grade), was denounced by the President and Secretary of War in very bitter terms. Some people went so far as to denounce him as a traitor—a most preposterous term to apply to a man who had rendered so much service as he had, even supposing he had made a mistake in granting such terms as he did to Johnston and his army. If Sherman had taken authority to send Johnston with his army home, with their arms to be put in the arsenals of their own States, without submitting the question to the authorities at Washington, the suspicions against him might have some foundation. But the feeling against Sherman died out very rapidly, and it was not many weeks before he was restored to the fullest confidence of the American people.

When, some days after my return to Washington, President Johnson and the Secretary of War received the terms which General Sherman had forwarded for approval, a Cabinet meeting was immediately called and I was sent for. There seemed to be the greatest consternation lest Sherman would commit the government to terms which they were not willing to accede to and which he had no right to grant. A message went out directing the troops in the South not to obey General Sherman. I was ordered to proceed at once to North Carolina and take charge of matters there myself. Of course I started without delay, and reached there as soon as possible. I repaired to Raleigh, where Sherman was, as quietly as possible, hoping to see him without even his army learning of my presence.

When I arrived I went to Sherman's headquarters, and we were at once closeted together. I showed him the instructions and orders under which I visited him. I told him that I wanted him to notify General Johnston that the terms which they had conditionally agreed upon had not been approved in Washington, and that he was authorized to offer the same terms I had given General Lee. I sent Sherman to do this himself. I did not wish the knowledge of my presence to be known to the army generally; so I left it to Sherman to negotiate the terms of the surrender solely by himself, and without the enemy knowing that I was anywhere near the field. As soon as possible I started to get away, to leave Sherman quite free and untrammeled.

At Goldsboro', on my way back, I met a mail, containing the last newspapers, and I found in them indications of great excitement in the North over the terms Sherman had given Johnston; and harsh orders that had been promulgated by the President and Secretary of War. I knew that Sherman must see these papers, and I fully realized what great indignation they would cause him, though I do not think his feelings could have been more excited than were my own. But like the true and loyal soldier that he was, he carried out the instructions I had given him, obtained the surrender of Johnston's army, and settled down in his camp about Raleigh, to await final orders.

There were still a few expeditions out in the South that could not be communicated with, and had to be left to act according to the judgment of their respective commanders. With these it was impossible to tell how the news of the surrender of Lee and Johnston, of which they must have heard, might affect their judgment as to what was best to do.

The three expeditions which I had tried so hard to get off from the commands of Thomas and Canby did finally get off: one under Canby himself, against Mobile, late in March; that under Stoneman, from East Tennessee, on the 20th; and the one under Wilson, starting from Eastport, Mississippi, on the 22d of March. They were all eminently successful, but without any good result. Indeed, much valuable property was destroyed and many lives lost at a time when we would have liked to spare them. The war was practically over before their victories were gained. They were so late in commencing operations that they did not hold any troops away, that otherwise would have been operating against the armies which were gradually forcing the Confederate armies to a surrender. The only possible good that we may have experienced from these raids was by Stoneman's getting near Lynchburg about the time the Armies of the Potomac and the James were closing in on Lee at Appomattox.

Stoneman entered North Carolina and then pushed north to strike the Virginia and Tennessee railroad. He got upon that road, destroyed its bridges at different places, and rendered the road useless to the enemy up to within a few miles of Lynchburg. His approach caused the evacuation of that city about the time we were at Appomattox, and was the cause of a commotion we heard of there. He then pushed south, and was operating in the rear of Johnston's army about the time the negotiations were going on between Sherman and Johnston for the latter's surrender. In this raid Stoneman captured and destroyed a large amount of stores, while fourteen guns and nearly two thousand prisoners were the trophies of his success.

Canby appeared before Mobile on the 27th of March. The city of Mobile was protected by two forts, besides other intrenchments—Spanish Fort, on the east side of the bay, and Fort Blakely, north of the city. These forts were invested. On the night of the 8th of April, the National troops having carried the enemy's works at one point, Spanish Fort was evacuated; and on the 9th, the very day of Lee's surrender, Blakely was carried by assault, with a considerable loss to us. On the 11th the city was evacuated.

I had tried for more than two years to have an expedition sent against Mobile when its possession by us would have been of great advantage. It finally cost lives to take it when its possession was of no importance, and when, if left alone, it would within a few days have fallen into our hands without any bloodshed whatever.

Wilson moved out with full twelve thousand men, well equipped and well armed. He was an energetic officer and accomplished his work rapidly. Forrest was in his front, but with neither his old-time army nor his old-time prestige. He now had principally conscripts. His conscripts were generally old men and boys. He had a few thousand regular cavalry left, but not enough to even retard materially the progress of Wilson's cavalry. Selma fell on the 2d of April, with a large number of prisoners and a large quantity of war-material, machine-shops, etc., to be disposed of by the victors. Tuscaloosa, Montgomery, and West Point fell in quick succession. These were all important points to the enemy by reason of their railroad connections, as depots of supplies, and because of their manufactories of war-material. They were fortified or intrenched, and there was considerable fighting before they were captured. Macon surrendered on the 21st of April. Here news was received of the negotiations for the surrender of Johnston's army. Wilson belonged to the military division commanded by Sherman, and of course was bound by his terms. This stopped all fighting.

General Richard Taylor had now become the senior Confederate officer still at liberty east of the Mississippi River, and on the 4th of May he surrendered everything within the limits of this extensive command. General E. Kirby Smith surrendered the trans-Mississippi department on the 26th of May, leaving no other Confederate army at liberty to continue the war.

Wilson's raid resulted in the capture of the fugitive President of the defunct Confederacy before he got out of the country. This occurred at Irwinsville, Georgia, on the 11th of May. For myself—and I believe Mr. Lincoln shared the feeling—I would have been very glad to have seen Mr. Davis succeed in escaping, but for one reason: I feared that if not captured he might get into the trans-Mississippi region and there set up a more contracted Confederacy. The young men now out of homes and out of employment might have rallied under his standard and protracted the war yet another year. The Northern people were tired of the war; they were tired of piling up a debt which would be a further mortgage upon their homes.
RIGHT PROFILE OF GENERAL GRANT. (FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN BY WALKER IN 1875, AND LENT BY MAJOR C. C. SNIFFIN.)

Mr. Lincoln, I believe, wanted Mr. Davis to escape, because he did not wish to deal with the matter of his punishment. He knew there would be people clamoring for the punishment of the ex-Confederate President, for high treason. He thought blood enough had already been spilled to atone for our wickedness as a nation. At all events, he did not wish to be the judge to decide whether more should be shed or not. But his own life was sacrificed at the hands of an assassin before the ex-President of the Confederacy was a prisoner in the hands of the government which he had lent all his talent and all his energies to destroy.

All things are said to be wisely directed, and for the best interest of all concerned. This reflection does not, however, abate in the slightest our sense of bereavement in the untimely loss of so good and great a man as Abraham Lincoln.

He would have proven the best friend the South could have had, and saved much of the wrangling and bitterness of feeling brought out by reconstruction under a President who at first wished to revenge himself upon Southern men of better social standing than himself, but who still sought their recognition, and in a short time conceived the idea and advanced the proposition to become their Moses to lead them triumphantly out of all their difficulties.

Vol. II.—24
Ch. XXVII

The story of the legislation enacted during the reconstruction period to stay the hands of the President is too fresh in the minds of the people to be told now. Much of it, no doubt, was unconstitutional; but it was hoped that the laws enacted would serve their purpose before the question of constitutionality could be submitted to the judiciary and a decision obtained. These laws did serve their purpose, and now remain "a dead letter" upon the statute-books of the United States, no one taking interest enough in them to give them a passing thought.

Much was said at the time about the garb Mr. Davis was wearing when he was captured. I cannot settle this question from personal knowledge of the facts; but I have been under the belief from information given to me by General Wilson shortly after the event, that when Mr. Davis learned that he was surrounded by our cavalry he was in his tent dressed in a gentleman's dressing-gown. Naturally enough, Mr. Davis wanted to escape, and would not reflect much how this should be accomplished provided it might be done successfully. If captured, he would be no ordinary prisoner. He represented all there was of that hostility to the government which had caused four years of the bloodiest war—and the most costly in other respects—of which history makes any record. Every one supposed he would be tried for treason if captured, and that he would be executed. Had he succeeded in making his escape in any disguise it would have been adjudged a good thing afterward by his admirers.

As my official letters on file in the War Department, as well as my remarks in this book, reflect upon General Thomas by dwelling somewhat upon his tardiness, it is due to myself, as well as to him, that I give my estimate of him as a soldier. The same remark will apply also in the case of General Canby. I had been at West Point with Thomas one year, and had known him later in the old army. He was a man of commanding appearance, slow and deliberate in speech and action; sensible, honest, and brave. He possessed valuable soldierly qualities in an eminent degree. He gained the confidence of all who served under him, and almost their love. This implies a very valuable quality. It is a quality which calls out the most efficient services of the troops serving under the commander possessing it.

Thomas’s dispositions were deliberately made, and always good. He could not be driven from a point he was given to hold. He was not as good, however, in pursuit as he was in action. I do not believe that he could ever have conducted Sherman’s army from Chattanooga to Atlanta against the defenses and the commander guarding that line in 1864. On the other hand, if it had been given him to hold the line which Johnston tried to hold, neither that general nor Sherman, nor any other officer, could have done it better.

Thomas was a valuable officer, who richly deserved, as he has received, the plaudits of his countrymen for the part he played in the great tragedy of 1861-65.
General Canby was an officer of great merit. He was naturally studious and inclined to the law. There have been in the army but very few, if any, officers who took as much interest in reading and digesting every act of Congress and every regulation for the government of the army as he. His knowledge gained in this way made him a most valuable staff-officer, a capacity in which almost all his army services were rendered up to the time of his being assigned to the Military Division of the Gulf. He was an exceedingly modest officer, though of great talent and learning. I presume his feelings when first called upon to command a large army against a fortified city were somewhat like my own when marching a regiment against General Thomas Harris in Missouri in 1861. Neither of us would have felt the slightest trepidation in going into battle with some one else commanding. Had Canby been in other engagements afterward, he would, I have no doubt, have advanced without any fear arising from a sense of the responsibility. He was afterward killed in the lava-beds of southern Oregon, while in pursuit of the hostile Modoc Indians. His character was as pure as his talent and learning were great. His services were valuable during the war, but principally as a bureau officer. I have no idea that it was from choice that his services were rendered in an office, but because of his superior efficiency there.
CHAPTER XXVIII

THE END OF THE WAR—THE MARCH TO WASHINGTON
—ONE OF LINCOLN’S ANECDOTES—GRAND REVIEW
AT WASHINGTON—CHARACTERISTICS OF LINCOLN AND STANTON—ESTIMATE OF THE DIFFERENT CORPS COMMANDERS

THINGS began to quiet down, and as the certainty that there would be no more armed resistance became clearer, the troops in North Carolina and Virginia were ordered to march immediately to the capital, and go into camp there until mustered out. Suitable garrisons were left at the prominent places throughout the South to ensure obedience to the laws that might be enacted for the government of the several States, and to ensure security to the lives and property of all classes. I do not know how far this was necessary, but I deemed it necessary, at that time, that such a course should be pursued. I think now that these garrisons were continued after they ceased to be absolutely required; but it is not to be expected that such a rebellion as was fought between the sections from 1861 to 1865 could terminate without leaving many serious apprehensions in the mind of the people as to what should be done.

Sherman marched his troops from Goldsboro' up to Manchester, on the south side of the James River, opposite Richmond, and there put them in camp, while he went back to Savannah to see what the situation was there.

373

It was during this trip that the last outrage was committed upon him. Halleck had been sent to Richmond to command Virginia, and had issued orders prohibiting even Sherman's own troops from obeying his, Sherman's, orders. Sherman met the papers on his return, containing this order of Halleck, and very justly felt indignant at the outrage. On his arrival at Fortress Monroe returning from Savannah, Sherman received an invitation from Halleck to come to Richmond and be his guest. This he indignantly refused, and informed Halleck, furthermore, that he had seen his order. He also stated that he was coming up to take command of his troops, and as he marched through it would probably be as well for Halleck not to show himself, because he (Sherman) would not be responsible for what some rash person might do through indignation for the treatment he had received. Very soon after that Sherman received orders from me to proceed to Washington city, and to go into camp on the south side of the city pending the mustering out of the troops.

There was no incident worth noting in the march northward from Goldsboro' to Richmond, or in that from Richmond to Washington city. The army, however, commanded by Sherman, which had been engaged in all the battles of the West and had marched from the Mississippi through the Southern States to the sea, from there to Goldsboro', and thence to Washington city, had passed over many of the battle-fields of the Army of the Potomac, thus having seen, to a greater extent than any other body of troops, the entire theater of the four years' war for the preservation of the Union.

The march of Sherman's army from Atlanta to the sea and north to Goldsboro', while it was not accompanied with the danger that was anticipated, yet was magnificent in its results, and equally magnificent in the way it was conducted. It had an important bearing, in various ways, upon the great object we had in view, that of closing the war. All the States east of the Mississippi River up to the State of Georgia had felt the hardships of the war. Georgia and South Carolina, and almost all of North Carolina, up to this time, had been exempt from invasion by the Northern armies, except upon their immediate sea-coasts. Their newspapers had given such an account of Confederate success that the people who remained at home had been convinced that the Yankees had been whipped from first to last, and driven from pillar to post, and that now they could hardly be holding out for any other purpose than to find a way out of the war with honor to themselves.

Even during this march of Sherman's the newspapers in his front were proclaiming daily that his army was nothing better than a mob of men who were frightened out of their wits and hastening, panic-stricken, to try to get under the cover of our navy for protection against the Southern people. As the army was seen marching on triumphantly, however, the minds of the people became disabused, and they saw the true state of affairs. In turn they became disheartened, and would have been glad to submit without compromise.

Another great advantage resulting from this march, and which was calculated to hasten the end, was the fact that the great storehouse of Georgia was entirely cut off from the Confederate armies. As the troops advanced north from Savannah, the destruction of the railroads in South Carolina and the southern part of North Carolina further cut off their resources, and left the armies still in Virginia and North Carolina dependent for supplies upon a very small area of country, already very much exhausted of food and forage.

In due time the two armies, one from Burkesville Junction and the other from the neighborhood of Raleigh, North Carolina, arrived and went into camp near the capital, as directed. The troops were hardy, being inured to fatigue, and they appeared in their respective camps as ready and fit for duty as they had ever been in their lives. I doubt whether an equal body of men of any nation, take them man for man, officer for officer, was ever gotten together that would have proved their equal in a great battle.

The armies of Europe are machines: the men are brave and the officers capable; but the majority of the soldiers in most of the nations of Europe are taken from a class of people who are not very intelligent and who have very little interest in the contest in which they are called upon to take part. Our armies were composed of men who were able to read, men who knew what they were fighting for, and could not be induced to serve as soldiers, except in an emergency when the safety of the nation was involved, and so necessarily must have been more than equal to men who fought merely because they were brave and because they were thoroughly drilled and inured to hardships.

Nothing of particular importance occurred during the time these troops were in camp before starting North.

I remember one little incident which I will relate as an anecdote characteristic of Mr. Lincoln. It occurred a day after I reached Washington, and about the time General Meade reached Burkesville with the army. Governor Smith of Virginia had left Richmond with the Confederate States government, and had gone to Danville. Supposing I was necessarily with the army at Burkesville, he addressed a letter to me there, informing me that, as governor of the Commonwealth of the State of Virginia, he had temporarily removed the State capital from Richmond to Danville, and asking if he would be permitted to perform the functions of his office there without molestation by the Federal authorities. I give this letter only in substance. He also inquired of me whether, in case he was not allowed to perform the duties of his office, he with a few others might not be permitted to leave the country and go abroad without interference. General Meade, being informed that a flag of truce was outside his pickets with a letter to me, at once sent out and had the letter brought in without informing the officer who brought it that I was not present. He read the letter and telegraphed me its contents. Meeting Mr. Lincoln shortly after receiving this despatch, I repeated its contents to him. Mr. Lincoln, supposing I was asking for instructions, said, in reply to that part of Governor Smith's letter which inquired whether he with a few friends would be permitted to leave the country unmolested, that his position was like that of a certain Irishman (giving the name) he knew in Springfield, who was very popular with the people, a man of considerable promise, and very much liked. Unfortunately he had acquired the habit of drinking, and his friends could see that the habit was growing on him. These friends determined to make an effort to save him, and to do this they drew up a pledge to abstain from all alcoholic drinks. They asked Pat to join them in signing the pledge, and he consented. He had been so long out of the habit of using plain water as a beverage that he resorted to soda-water as a substitute. After a few days this began to grow distasteful to him. So holding the glass behind him, he said, "Doctor, could n't you drop a bit of brandy in that unbeknownst to myself?"

I do not remember what the instructions were the President gave me, but I know that Governor Smith was not permitted to perform the duties of his office. I also know that if Mr. Lincoln had been spared, there would have been no efforts made to prevent any one from leaving the country who desired to do so. He would have been equally willing to permit the return of the same expatriated citizens after they had time to repent of their choice.

On the 18th of May orders were issued by the adjutant-general for a grand review by the President and his Cabinet of Sherman's and Meade's armies. The review commenced on the 23d and lasted two Missing Pages

These missing pages will be inserted at a future date.
Missing Pages

These missing pages will be inserted at a future date.
it unpleasant at times, even in battle, for those around him to approach him even with information. In spite of this defect he was a most valuable officer, and deserves a high place in the annals of his country.

General Burnside was an officer who was generally liked and respected. He was not, however, fitted to command an army. No one knew this better than himself. He always admitted his blunders, and extenuated those of officers under him beyond what they were entitled to. It was hardly his fault that he was ever assigned to a separate command.

Of Hooker I saw but little during the war. I had known him very well before, however. Where I did see him, at Chattanooga, his achievement in bringing his command around the point of Lookout Mountain and into Chattanooga Valley was brilliant. I nevertheless regarded him as a dangerous man. He was not subordinate to his superiors. He was ambitious to the extent of caring nothing for the rights of others. His disposition was, when engaged in battle, to get detached from the main body of the army and exercise a separate command, gathering to his standard all he could of his juniors.

Hancock stands the most conspicuous figure of all the general officers who did not exercise a separate command. He commanded a corps longer than any other one, and his name was never mentioned as having committed in battle a blunder for which he was responsible. He was a man of very conspicuous personal appearance. Tall, well formed, and, at the time of which I now write, young and fresh-looking, he presented an appearance that
Ch. XXVIII would attract the attention of an army as he passed. His genial disposition made him friends, and his personal courage and his presence with his command in the thickest of the fight won for him the confidence of troops serving under him. No matter how hard the fight, the Second Corps always felt that their commander was looking after them.

Sedgwick was killed at Spottsylvania before I had an opportunity of forming an estimate of his qualifications as a soldier from personal observation. I had known him in Mexico when both of us were lieutenants, and when our service gave no indication that either of us would ever be equal to the command of a brigade. He stood very high in the army, however, as an officer and a man. He was brave and conscientious. His ambition was not great, and he seemed to dread responsibility. He was willing to do any amount of battling, but always wanted some one else to direct. He declined the command of the Army of the Potomac once, if not oftener.

General Alfred H. Terry came into the army as a volunteer without a military education. His way was won without political influence up to an important separate command—the expedition against Fort Fisher, in January, 1865. His success there was most brilliant, and won for him the rank of brigadier-general in the regular army and of major-general of volunteers. He is a man who makes friends of those under him by his consideration of their wants and their dues. As a commander he won their confidence by his coolness in action and by his clearness of perception in taking in the situation under which he was placed at any given time.
LEFT PROFILE OF GENERAL GRANT. (FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN BY WALKER IN 1875, AND LENT BY MAJOR C. C. SNIFFIN.) ESTIMATE OF THE CORPS COMMANDERS

Griffin, Humphreys, and Mackenzie were good corps commanders, but came into that position so near to the close of the war as not to attract public attention. All three served as such in the last campaign of the Armies of the Potomac and the James, which culminated at Appomattox Court House, on the 9th of April, 1865. The sudden collapse of the rebellion monopolized attention to the exclusion of almost everything else. I regarded Mackenzie as the most promising young officer in the army. Graduating at West Point, as he did, during the second year of the war, he had won his way up to the command of a corps before its close. This he did upon his own merit and without influence.
CONCLUSION

The cause of the great war of the rebellion against the United States will have to be attributed to slavery. For some years before the war began it was a trite saying among some politicians that "a state half slave and half free cannot exist." All must become slave or all free, or the state will go down. I took no part myself in any such view of the case at the time, but since the war is over, reviewing the whole question, I have come to the conclusion that the saying is quite true.

Slavery was an institution that required unusual guaranties for its security wherever it existed; and in a country like ours, where the larger portion of it was free territory inhabited by an intelligent and well-to-do population, the people would naturally have but little sympathy with demands upon them for its protection. Hence the people of the South were dependent upon keeping control of the general government to secure the perpetuation of their favorite institution. They were enabled to maintain this control long after the States where slavery existed had ceased to have the controlling power, through the assistance they received from odd men here and there throughout the Northern States. They saw their power waning, and this led them to encroach upon the prerogatives and independence. of the Northern States by enacting such laws as the Fugitive Slave Law. By this law every Northern man was obliged, when properly summoned, to turn out and help apprehend the runaway slave of a Southern man. Northern marshals became slave-catchers, and Northern courts had to contribute to the support and protection of the institution.

This was a degradation which the North would not permit any longer than until they could get the power to expunge such laws from the statute-books. Prior to the time of these encroachments the great majority of the people of the North had no particular quarrel with slavery, so long as they were not forced to have it themselves. But they were not willing to play the rôle of police for the South in the protection of this particular institution.

In the early days of the country, before we had railroads, telegraphs, and steamboats,—in a word, rapid transit of any sort,—the States were each almost a separate nationality. At that time the subject of slavery caused but little or no disturbance to the public mind. But the country grew, rapid transit was established, and trade and commerce between the States got to be so much greater than before, that the power of the National government became more felt and recognized, and therefore had to be enlisted in the cause of this institution.

It is probably well that we had the war when we did. We are better off now than we would have been without it, and have made more rapid progress than we otherwise should have made. The civilized nations of Europe have been stimulated into unusual activity, so that commerce, trade, travel, and thorough acquaintance among people of different nationalities have become common; whereas before it was but the few who had ever had the privilege of going beyond the limits of their own country, or who knew anything about other people. Then, too, our republican institutions were regarded as experiments up to the breaking out of the rebellion, and monarchical Europe generally believed that our republic was a rope of sand that would part the moment the slightest strain was brought upon it. Now it has shown itself capable of dealing with one of the greatest wars that was ever made, and our people have proven themselves to be the most formidable in war of any nationality.

But this war was a fearful lesson, and should teach us the necessity of avoiding wars in the future.

The conduct of some of the European states during our troubles shows the lack of conscience of communities where the responsibility does not come upon a single individual. Seeing a nation that extended from ocean to ocean, embracing the better part of a continent, growing as we were growing in population, wealth, and intelligence, the European nations thought it would be well to give us a check. We might possibly, after a while, threaten their peace, or, at least, the perpetuity of their institutions. Hence England was constantly finding fault with the administration at Washington because we were not able to keep up an effective blockade. She also joined, at first, with France and Spain in setting up an Austrian prince upon the throne in Mexico, totally disregarding any rights or claims that Mexico had of being treated as an independent power. It is true they trumped up grievances as a pretext, but they were only pretexts which can always be found when wanted.

Mexico, in her various revolutions, had been unable to give that protection to the subjects of foreign nations which she would have liked to give, and some of her revolutionary leaders had forced loans from them. Under pretense of protecting their citizens, these nations seized upon Mexico as a foothold for establishing a European monarchy upon our continent, thus threatening our peace at home. I myself regarded this as a direct act of war against the United States by the powers engaged, and supposed as a matter of course that the United States would treat it as such when their hands were free to strike. I often spoke of the matter to Mr. Lincoln and the Secretary of War, but never heard any special views from them to enable me to judge what they thought or felt about it. I inferred that they felt a good deal as I did, but were unwilling to commit themselves while we had our own troubles upon our hands.

All of the powers except France very soon withdrew from the armed intervention for the establishment of an Austrian prince upon the throne of Mexico; but the governing people of these countries continued to the close of the war to throw obstacles in our way. After the surrender of Lee, therefore, entertaining the opinion here expressed, I sent Sheridan with a corps to the Rio Grande to have him where he might aid Juarez in expelling the French from Mexico. These troops got off before they could be stopped, and went to the Rio Grande, where Sheridan distributed them up and down the river, much to the consternation of the troops in the quarter of Mexico bordering on that stream. This soon led to a request from France that we should withdraw our troops from the Rio Grande, and to negotiations for the withdrawal of theirs. Finally Bazaine was withdrawn from Mexico by order of the French government. From that day the empire began to totter. Mexico was then able to maintain her independence without aid from us.

France is the traditional ally and friend of the United States. I did not blame France for her part in the scheme to erect a monarchy upon the ruins of the Mexican republic. That was the scheme of one man, an imitator without genius or merit. He had succeeded in stealing the government of his country, and made a change in its form against the wishes and instincts of his people. He tried to play the part of the first Napoleon, without the ability to sustain that rôle. He sought by new conquests to add to his empire and his glory; but the signal failure of his scheme of conquest was the precursor of his own overthrow.

Like our own war between the States, the Franco-Prussian war was an expensive one; but it was worth to France all it cost her people. It was the completion of the downfall of Napoleon III. The beginning was when he landed troops on this continent. Failing here, the prestige of his name—all the prestige he ever had—was gone. He must achieve a success or fall. He tried to strike down his neighbor, Prussia—and fell.

I never admired the character of the first Napoleon; but I recognize his great genius. His work, too, has left its impress for good on the face of Europe. The third Napoleon could have no claim to having done a good or just act.

To maintain peace in the future it is necessary to be prepared for war. There can scarcely be a possible chance of a conflict, such as the last one, occurring among our own people again; but, growing as we are in population, wealth, and military power, we may become the envy of nations which led us in all these particulars only a few years ago; and unless we are prepared for it we may be in danger of a combined movement being some day made to crush us out. Now, scarcely twenty years after the war, we seem to have forgotten the lessons it taught, and are going on as if in the greatest security, without the power to resist an invasion by the fleets of fourth-rate European powers for a time until we could prepare for them.

We should have a good navy, and our sea-coast defenses should be put in the finest possible condition. Neither of these cost much when it is considered where the money goes, and what we get in return. Money expended in a fine navy not only adds to our security and tends to prevent war in the future, but is very material aid to our commerce with foreign nations in the mean time. Money spent upon sea-coast defenses is spent among our own people, and all goes back again among the people. The work accomplished, too, like that of the navy, gives us a feeling of security.

England's course toward the United States during the rebellion exasperated the people of this country very much against the mother-country. I regretted it. England and the United States are natural allies, and should be the best of friends. They speak one language and are related by blood and other ties. We together, or even either separately, are better qualified than any other people to establish commerce between all the nationalities of the world.

England governs her own colonies, and particularly those embracing the people of different races from her own, better than any other nation. She is just to the conquered, but rigid. She makes them self-supporting, but gives the benefit of labor to the laborer. She does not seem to look upon the colonies as outside possessions which she is at liberty to work for the support and aggrandizement of the home government.

The hostility of England to the United States during our rebellion was not so much real as it was apparent. It was the hostility of the leaders of one political party. I am told that there was no time during the civil war when they were able to get up in England a demonstration in favor of secession, while these were constantly being gotten up in favor of the Union, or, as they called it, in favor of the North. Even in Manchester, which suffered so fearfully by having the cotton cut off from her mills, they had a monster demonstration in favor of the North at the very time when their workmen were almost famishing.

It is possible that the question of a conflict between races may come up in the future, as did that between freedom and slavery before. The condition of the colored man within our borders may become a source of anxiety, to say the least. But he was brought to our shores by compulsion, and he now should be considered as having as good a right to remain here as any other class of our citizens. It was looking to a settlement of this question that led me to urge the annexation of Santo Domingo during the time I was President of the United States.

Santo Domingo was freely offered to us not only by the administration, but by all the people, almost without price. The island is upon our shores, is very fertile, and is capable of supporting fifteen millions of people. The products of the soil are so valuable that labor in her fields would be so compensated as to enable those who wished to go there to quickly repay the cost of their passage. I took it that the colored people would go there in great numbers, so as to have independent States governed by their own race. They would still be States of the Union, and under the protection of the general government; but the citizens would be almost wholly colored.

By the war with Mexico we had acquired, as we have seen, territory almost equal in extent to that we already possessed. It was seen that the volunteers of the Mexican war largely composed the pioneers to settle up the Pacific coast country. Their numbers, however, were scarcely sufficient to be a nucleus for the population of the important points of the territory acquired by that war. After our rebellion, when so many young men were at liberty to return to their homes, they found they were not satisfied with the farm, the store, or the workshop of the villages, but wanted larger fields. The mines of the mountains first attracted them; but afterward they found that rich valleys and productive grazing and farming lands were there.
This territory, the geography of which was not known to us at the close of the rebellion, is now as well mapped as any portion of our country. Railroads traverse it in every direction—north, south, east, and west. The mines are worked. The high lands are used for grazing purposes, and rich agricultural lands are found in many of the valleys. This is the work of the volunteer. It is probable that the Indians would have had control of these lands for a century yet but for the war. We must conclude, therefore, that wars are not always evils unmixed with some good.

Prior to the rebellion the great mass of the people were satisfied to remain near the scenes of their birth. In fact, an immense majority of the whole people did not feel secure against coming to want should they move among entire strangers. So much was the country divided into small communities that localized idioms had grown up, so that you could almost tell what section a person was from by hearing him speak. Before, new territories were settled by a "class"—people who shunned contact with others; people who, when the country began to settle up around them, would push out farther from civilization. Their guns furnished meat, and the cultivation of a very limited amount of the soil their bread and vegetables. All the streams abounded with fish. Trapping would furnish pelts to be brought into the States once a year, to pay for necessary articles which they could not raise—powder, lead, whisky, tobacco, and some store goods. Occasionally some little articles of luxury would enter into these purchases—a quarter of a pound of tea, two or three pounds of coffee, more of sugar, some playing-cards, and, if anything was left over of the proceeds of the sale, more whisky.

Little was known of the topography of the country beyond the settlements of these frontiersmen. This is all changed now. The war begot a spirit of independence and enterprise. The feeling now is that a youth must cut loose from his old surroundings to enable him to get up in the world. There is now such a commingling of the people that particular idioms and pronunciation are no longer localized to any great extent; the country has filled up "from the center all around to the sea"; railroads connect the two oceans and all parts of the interior; maps, nearly perfect, of every part of the country are now furnished the student of geography.

The war has made us a nation of great power and intelligence. We have but little to do to preserve peace, happiness, and prosperity at home, and the respect of other nations. Our experience ought to teach us the necessity of the first; our power secures the latter.

I feel that we are on the eve of a new era, when there is to be great harmony between the Federal and Confederate. I cannot stay to be a living witness to the correctness of this prophecy; but I feel it within me that it is to be so. The universally kind feeling expressed for me at a time when it was supposed that each day would prove my last seemed to me the beginning of the answer to "Let us have peace."

The expressions of these kindly feelings were not restricted to a section of the country nor to a division of the people. They came from individual citizens of all nationalities; from all denominations —the Protestant, the Catholic, and the Jew; and from the various societies of the land—scientific, educational, religious or otherwise. Politics did not enter into the matter at all.

I am not egotist enough to suppose all this significance should be given because I was the object of it. But the war between the States was a very bloody and a very costly war. One side or the other had to yield principles they deemed dearer than life before it could be brought to an end. I commanded the whole of the mighty host engaged on the victorious side. I was, no matter whether deservedly so or not, a representative of that side of the controversy. It is a significant and gratifying fact that Confederates should have joined heartily in this spontaneous move. I hope the good feeling inaugurated may continue to the end.
Fold-out Placeholder

This fold-out is being digitized, and will be inserted at a future date.
Fold-out Placeholder

This fold-out is being digitized, and will be inserted at a future date.
APPENDIX

REPORT OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL U. S. GRANT, OF THE UNITED STATES ARMIES (1864-65)

HEADQUARTERS, ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 22, 1865.

HON. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Sir: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the Armies of the United States from the date of my appointment to command the same.

From an early period in the rebellion I had been impressed with the idea that active and continuous operations of all the troops that could be brought into the field, regardless of season and weather, were necessary to a speedy termination of the war. The resources of the enemy and his numerical strength were far inferior to ours; but as an offset to this, we had a vast territory, with a population hostile to the government, to garrison, and long lines of river and railroad communications to protect, to enable us to supply the operating armies.

The armies in the East and West acted independently and without concert, like a balky team, no two ever pulling together, enabling the enemy to use to great advantage his interior lines of communication for transporting troops from East to West, reinforcing the army most vigorously pressed, and to furlough large numbers, during seasons of inactivity on our part, to go to their homes and do the work of producing for the support of their armies. It was a question whether our numerical strength and resources were not more than balanced by these disadvantages and the enemy's superior position.

From the first I was firm in the conviction that no peace could be had that would be stable and conducive to the happiness of the people, both North and South, until the military power of the rebellion was entirely broken.

I therefore determined, first, to use the greatest number of troops practicable against the armed force of the enemy, preventing him from using the same force at different seasons against first one and then another of our armies, and the possibility of repose for refitting and producing necessary supplies for carrying on resistance. Second, to hammer continuously against the armed force of the enemy and his resources, until by mere attrition, if in no other way, there should be nothing left to him but an equal submission with the loyal section of our common country to the Constitution and laws of the land.

These views have been kept constantly in mind, and orders given and campaigns made to carry them out. Whether they might have been better in conception and execution is for the people, who mourn the loss of friends fallen, and who have to pay the pecuniary cost, to say. All I can say is that what I have done has been done conscientiously, to the best of my ability, and in what I conceived to be for the best interests of the whole country.

At the date when this report begins, the situation of the contending forces was about as follows: The Mississippi River was strongly garrisoned by Federal troops, from St. Louis, Missouri, to its mouth. The line of the Arkansas was also held, thus giving us armed possession of all west of the Mississippi, north of that stream. A few points in southern Louisiana, not remote from the river, were held by us, together with a small garrison at and near the mouth of the Rio Grande. All the balance of the vast territory of Arkansas, Louisi ana, and Texas was in the almost undisputed possession of the enemy, with an army of probably not less than eighty thousand effective men, that could have been brought into the field had there been sufficient opposition to have brought them out. The let-alone policy had demoralized this force so that probably but little more than one half of it was ever present in garrison at any one time. But the one half, or forty thousand men, with the bands of guerrillas scattered through Missouri, Arkansas, and along the Mississippi River, and the disloyal character of much of the population, compelled the use of a large number of troops to keep navigation open on the river, and to protect the loyal people to the west of it. To the east of the Mississippi we held substantially with the line of the Tennessee and Holston rivers, running eastward to include nearly all of the State of Tennessee. South of Chattanooga a small foothold had been obtained in Georgia, sufficient to protect East Tennessee from incursions from the enemy's force at Dalton, Georgia. West Virginia was substantially within our lines. Virginia, with the exception of the northern border, the Potomac River, a small area about the mouth of James River, covered by the troops at Norfolk and Fort Monroe, and the territory covered by the Army of the Potomac lying along the Rapidan, was in the possession of the enemy. Along the sea-coast footholds had been obtained at Plymouth, Washington, and New Berne, in North Carolina; Beaufort, Folly and Morris islands, Hilton Head, Fort Pulaski, and Port Royal, in South Carolina; Fernandina and St. Augustine, in Florida. Key West and Pensacola were also in our possession, while all the important ports were blockaded by the navy.
The accompanying map, a copy of which was sent to General Sherman and other commanders in March, 1864, shows by red lines the territory occupied by us at the beginning of the rebellion, and at the opening of the campaign of 1864, while those in blue are the lines which it was proposed to occupy.

Behind the Union lines there were many bands of guerrillas and a large population disloyal to the government, making it necessary to guard every foot of road or river used in supplying our armies. In the South a reign of military despotism prevailed, which made every man and boy capable of bearing arms a soldier, and those who could not bear arms in the field acted as provosts for collecting deserters and returning them. This enabled the enemy to bring almost his entire strength into the field.

The enemy had concentrated the bulk of his forces east of the Mississippi into two armies, commanded by Generals R. E. Lee and J. E. Johnston, his ablest and best generals. The army commanded by Lee occupied the south bank of the Rapidan, extending from Mine Run westward, strongly intrenched, covering and defending Richmond, the rebel capital, against the Army of the Potomac. The army under Johnston occupied a strongly intrenched position at Dalton, Georgia, covering and defending Atlanta, Georgia,—a place of great importance as a railroad center,—against the armies under Major-General W. T. Sherman. In addition to these armies he had a large cavalry force, under Forrest, in northeast Mississippi; a considerable force, of all arms, in the Shenandoah Valley and in the western part of Virginia and extreme eastern part of Tennessee; and also confronting our sea-coast garrisons, and holding blockaded ports where we had no foothold upon land.

These two armies, and the cities covered and defended by them, were the main objective points of the campaign.

Major-General W. T. Sherman, who was appointed to the command of the Military Division of the Mississippi, embracing all the armies and territory east of the Mississippi River to the Alleghanies, and the Department of Arkansas, west of the Mississippi, had the immediate command of the armies operating against Johnston.

Major-General George G. Meade had the immediate command of the Army of the Potomac, from where I exercised general supervision of the movements of all our armies.

General Sherman was instructed to move against Johnston's army, to break it up, and to go into the interior of the enemy's country as far as he could, inflicting all the damage he could upon their war resources. If the enemy in his front showed signs of joining Lee, to follow him up to the full extent of his ability, while I would prevent the concentration of Lee upon him, if it was in the power of the

---

1 This allusion is to a map which is fully described in the "Official Records of the War of the Rebellion," vol. xxxii, part 3, p. 261.—F. D. G.
Army of the Potomac to do so. More specific written instructions were not given, for the reason that I had talked over with him the plans of the campaign, and was satisfied that he understood them and would execute them to the fullest extent possible.

Major-General N. P. Banks, then on an expedition up Red River against Shreveport, Louisiana (which had been organized previous to my appointment to command), was notified by me on the 15th of March of the importance it was that Shreveport should be taken at the earliest possible day, and that if he found that the taking of it would occupy from ten to fifteen days' more time than General Sherman had given his troops to be absent from their command, he would send them back at the time specified by General Sherman, even if it led to the abandonment of the main object of the Red River expedition, for this force was necessary to movements east of the Mississippi; that should his expedition prove successful he would hold Shreveport and the Red River with such force as he might deem necessary, and return the balance of his troops to the neighborhood of New Orleans, commencing no move for the further acquisition of territory, unless it was to make that then held by him more easily held; that it might be a part of the spring campaign to move against Mobile; that it certainly would be, if troops enough could be obtained to make it without embarrassing other movements; that New Orleans would be the point of departure for such an expedition; also, that I had directed General Steele to make a real move from Arkansas, as suggested by him (General Banks), instead of a demonstration, as Steele thought advisable.

On the 31st of March, in addition to the foregoing notification and directions, he was instructed as follows:

1st. If successful in your expedition against Shreveport, that you turn over the defense of the Red River to General Steele and the navy.

2d. That you abandon Texas entirely, with the exception of your hold upon the Rio Grande. This can be held with four thousand men, if they will turn their attention immediately to fortifying their positions. At least one half of the force required for this service might be taken from the colored troops.

3d. By properly fortifying on the Mississippi River, the force to guard it from Port Hudson to New Orleans can be reduced to ten thousand men, if not to a less number. Six thousand more would then hold all the rest of the territory necessary to hold until active operations can again be resumed west of the river. According to your last return, this would give you a force of over thirty thousand effective men with which to move against Mobile. To this I expect to add five thousand men from Missouri. If, however, you think the force here stated too small to hold the territory regarded as necessary to hold possession of, I would say concentrate at least twenty-five thousand men of your present command for operations against Mobile. With these and such additions as I can give you from elsewhere, lose no time in making a demonstration, to be followed by an attack upon Mobile. Two or more ironclads will be ordered to report to Admiral Farragut.
This gives him a strong naval fleet with which to coöperate. You can make your own arrangements with the admiral for his coöperation, and select your own line of approach. My own idea of the matter is that Passacogula should be your base; but, from your long service in the Gulf Department, you will know best about the matter. It is intended that your movements shall be coöperative with movements elsewhere, and you cannot now start too soon. All I would now add is, that you commence the concentration of your forces at once. Preserve a profound secrecy of what you intend doing, and start at the earliest possible moment.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-General Mcade was instructed that Lee's army would be his objective point; that wherever Lee went he would go also. For his movement two plans presented themselves: one to cross the Rapidan below Lee, moving by his right flank; the other above, moving by his left. Each presented advantages over the other, with corresponding objections. By crossing above, Lee would be cut off from all chance of ignoring Richmond or going north on a raid. But if we took this route, all we did would have to be done whilst the rations we started with held out; besides, it separated us from Butler, so that he could not be directed how to coöperate. If we took the other route, Brandy Station could be used as a base of supplies until another was secured on the York or James rivers. Of these, however, it was decided to take the lower route.

The following letter of instruction was addressed to Major-General B. F. Butler:

Fort Monroe, Virginia, April 2, 1864.

General: In the spring campaign, which it is desirable shall commence at as early a day as practicable, it is proposed to have coöperative action of all the armies in the field, as far as this object can be accomplished.

It will not be possible to unite our armies into two or three large ones to act as so many units, owing to the absolute necessity of holding on to the territory already taken from the enemy. But, generally speaking, concentration can be practically effected by armies moving to the interior of the enemy's country from the territory they have to guard. By such movement they interpose themselves between the enemy and the country to be guarded, thereby reducing the number necessary to guard important points, or at least occupy the attention of a part of the enemy's force, if no greater object is gained. Lee's army and Richmond being the greater objects toward which our attention must be directed in the next campaign, it is desirable to unite all the force we can against them. The necessity of covering Washington with the Army of the Potomac, and of covering your department with your army, makes it impossible to unite these forces at the beginning of any move. I propose, therefore, what comes nearest this of anything that seems practicable: The Army of the Potomac will act from its present base, Lee's army being the objective point. You will collect all the forces from your command that can be spared from garrison duty—I should say not less than twenty thousand effective men—to operate on the south side of James River, Richmond being your objective point. To the force you already have will be added about ten thousand men from South Carolina, under Major-General Gillmore, who will command them in person. Major-General W. F. Smith is ordered to report to you, to command the troops sent into the field from your own department.

General Gillmore will be ordered to report to you at Fortress Monroe, with all the troops on transports, by the 18th instant, or as soon thereafter as practicable. Should you not receive notice by that time to move, you will make such disposition of them and your other forces as you may deem best calculated to deceive the enemy as to the real move to be made.

When you are notified to move, take City Point with as much force as possible. Fortify, or rather intrench, at once, and concentrate all your troops for the field there as rapidly as you can. From City Point directions cannot be given at this time for your further movements.

The fact that has already been stated—that is, that Richmond is to be your objective point, and that there is to be cooperation between your force and the Army of the Potomac—must be your guide. This indicates the necessity of your holding close to the south bank of the James River as you advance. Then, should the enemy be forced into his intrenchments in Richmond, the Army of the Potomac would follow, and by means of transports the two armies would become a unit.

All the minor details of your advance are left entirely to your direction. If, however, you think it practicable to use your cavalry south of you, so as to cut the railroad about Hicksford, about the time of the general advance, it would be of immense advantage.

You will please forward for my information, at the earliest practicable day, all orders, details, and instructions you may give for the execution of this order.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-General B. F. Butler.

On the 16th these instructions were substantially reiterated. On the 19th, in order to secure full cooperation between his army and that of General Meade, he was informed that I expected him to move from Fort Monroe the same day that General Meade moved from Culpeper. The exact time I was to telegraph him as soon as it was fixed, and that it would not be earlier than the 27th of April; that it was my intention to fight Lee between Culpeper and Richmond, if he would stand. Should he, however, fall back into Richmond, I would follow up and make a junction with his (General Butler's) army on the James River; that, could I be certain he would be able to invest Richmond on the south side, so as to have his left resting on the James, above the city, I would form the junction there; that circumstances might make this course advisable anyhow; that he should use every exertion to secure footing as far up the south side of the river as he could, and as soon as possible after the receipt of orders to move; that if he could not carry the city, he should at least detain as large a force there as possible.
In coöperation with the main movements against Lee and Johnston, I was desirous of using all other troops necessarily kept in departments remote from the fields of immediate operations, and also those kept in the background for the protection of our extended lines between the loyal States and the armies operating against them.

A very considerable force, under command of Major-General Sigel, was so held for the protection of West Virginia and the frontiers of Maryland and Pennsylvania. Whilst these troops could not be withdrawn to distant fields without exposing the North to invasion by comparatively small bodies of the enemy, they could act directly to their front, and give better protection than if lying idle in garrison. By such a movement they would either compel the enemy to detach largely for the protection of his supplies and lines of communication, or he would lose them. General Sigel was therefore directed to organize all his available force into two expeditions, to move from Beverly and Charleston, under command of Generals Ord and Crook, against the East Tennessee and Virginia railroad. Subsequently, General Ord having been relieved at his own request, General Sigel was instructed, at his own suggestion, to give up the expedition by Beverly, and to form two columns, one under General Crook, on the Kanawha, numbering about ten thousand men, and one on the Shenandoah, numbering about seven thousand men. The one on the Shenandoah to assemble between Cumberland and the Shenandoah, and the infantry and artillery advanced to Cedar Creek with such cavalry as could be made available at the moment, to threaten the enemy in the Shenandoah Valley, and advance as far as possible; while General Crook would take possession of Lewisburg with part of his force and move down the Tennessee railroad, doing as much damage as he could, destroying the New River Bridge and the salt-works at Saltville, Virginia.

Owing to the weather and bad condition of the roads, operations were delayed until the 1st of May, when, everything being in readiness and the roads favorable, orders were given for a general movement of all the armies not later than the 4th of May.

My first object, being to break the military power of the rebellion and capture the enemy's important strongholds, made me desirous that General Butler should succeed in his movement against Richmond, as that would tend more than anything else, unless it were the capture of Lee's army, to accomplish this desired result in the East. If he failed, it was my determination, by hard fighting, either to compel Lee to retreat, or to so cripple him that he could not detach a large force to go north, and still retain enough for the defense of Richmond. It was well understood by both Generals Butler and Meade before starting on the campaign that it was my intention to put both their armies south of the James River, in case of failure to destroy Lee without it.
Before giving General Butler his instructions I visited him at Fort Monroe, and in conversation pointed out the apparent importance of getting possession of Petersburg, and destroying railroad communication as far south as possible. Believing, however, in the practicability of capturing Richmond unless it was reinforced, I made that the objective point of his operations. As the Army of the Potomac was to move simultaneously with him, Lee could not detach from his army with safety, and the enemy did not have troops elsewhere to bring to the defense of the city in time to meet a rapid movement from the north of James River.

I may here state that, commanding all the armies as I did, I tried as far as possible to leave General Meade in independent command of the Army of the Potomac. My instructions for that army were all through him, and were general in their nature, leaving all the details and the execution to him. The campaigns that followed proved him to be the right man in the right place. His commanding always in the presence of an officer superior to him in rank has drawn from him much of that public attention that his zeal and ability entitle him to, and which he would otherwise have received.

The movement of the Army of the Potomac commenced early on the morning of the 4th of May, under the immediate direction and orders of Major-General Meade, pursuant to instructions. Before night the whole army was across the Rapidan (the Fifth and Sixth corps crossing at Germanna Ford, and the Second Corps at Ely's Ford, the cavalry, under Major-General Sheridan, moving in advance), with the greater part of its trains, numbering about four thousand wagons, meeting with but slight opposition. The average distance traveled by the troops that day was about twelve miles. This I regarded as a great success, and it removed from my mind the most serious apprehensions I had entertained—that of crossing the river in the face of an active, large, well-appointed, and ably commanded army, and how so large a train was to be carried through a hostile country, and protected. Early on the 5th the advance corps (the Fifth, Major-General G. K. Warren commanding) met and engaged the enemy outside his intrenchments near Mine Run. The battle raged furiously all day, the whole army being brought into the fight as fast as the corps could be got upon the field, which, considering the density of the forest and narrowness of the roads, was done with commendable promptness.

General Burnside, with the Ninth Corps, was, at the time the Army of the Potomac moved, left with the bulk of his corps at the crossing of the Rappahannock River and Alexandria railroad, holding the road back to Bull Run, with instructions not to move until he received notice that a crossing of the Rapidan was secured, but to move promptly as soon as such notice was received. This crossing he was apprised of on the afternoon of the 4th. By six o'clock of the morning of the 6th he was leading his corps into action near the Wilderness Tavern, some of his troops having marched a distance of over thirty miles, crossing both the Rappahannock and Rapidan rivers. Considering that a large proportion—probably two thirds—of his command was composed of new troops unaccustomed to marches, and carrying the accoutrements of a soldier, this was a remarkable march.

The battle of the Wilderness was renewed by us at five o'clock on the morning of the 6th, and continued with unabated fury until darkness set in, each army holding substantially the same position that they had on the evening of the 5th. After dark the enemy made a feeble attempt to turn our right flank, capturing several hundred prisoners and creating considerable confusion. But the promptness of General Sedgwick, who was personally present and commanded that part of our line, soon reformed it and restored order. On the morning of the 7th reconnaissances showed that the enemy had fallen behind his intrenched lines, with pickets to the front, covering a part of the battle-field. From this it was evident to my mind that the two days' fighting had satisfied him of his inability to further maintain the contest in the open field, notwithstanding his advantage of position, and that he would wait an attack behind his works. I therefore determined to push on and put my whole force between him and Richmond, and orders were at once issued for a movement by his right flank. On the night of the 7th the march was commenced toward Spottsylvania Court House, the Fifth Corps moving on the most direct road. But the enemy, having become apprised of our movement, and having the shorter line, was enabled to reach there first. On the 8th General Warren met a force of the enemy, which had been sent out to oppose and delay his advance, to gain time to fortify the line taken up at Spottsylvania. This force was steadily driven back on the main force within the recently constructed works, after considerable fighting, resulting in severe loss to both sides. On the morning of the 9th General Sheridan started on a raid against the enemy's lines of communication with Richmond. The 9th, 10th, and 11th were spent in maneuvering and fighting, without decisive results. Among the killed on the 9th was that able and distinguished soldier, Major-General John Sedgwick, commanding the Sixth Army-corps. Major-General H. G. Wright succeeded him in command. Early on the morning of the 12th a general attack was made on the enemy in position. The Second Corps, Major-General Hancock commanding, carried a salient of his line, capturing most of Johnson's division of Ewell's corps and twenty pieces of artillery. But the resistance was so obstinate that the advantage gained did not prove decisive. The 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th were consumed in maneuvering and awaiting the arrival of reinforcements from Washington. Deeming it impracticable to make any further attack upon the enemy at Spottsylvania Court House, orders were issued on the 18th with a view to a movement to the North Anna, to commence at twelve o'clock on the night of the 19th. Late in the afternoon of the 19th, Ewell's corps came out of its works on our extreme right flank; but the attack was promptly repulsed with heavy loss. This delayed the movement to the North Anna until the night of the 21st, when it was commenced. But the enemy again, having the shorter line, and being in possession of the main roads, was enabled to reach the North Anna in advance of us, and took position behind it. The Fifth Corps reached the North Anna on the afternoon of the 23d, closely followed by the Sixth Corps. The Second and Ninth corps got up about the same time, the Second holding the railroad-bridge, and the Ninth lying between that and Jericho Ford. General Warren affected a crossing the same afternoon, and got a position without much opposition. Soon after getting into position he was violently attacked, but repulsed the enemy with great slaughter. On the 25th General Sheridan rejoined the Army of the Potomac from the raid on which he started from Spottsylvania, having destroyed the depots at Beaver Dam and Ashland stations, four trains of cars, large supplies of rations, and many miles of railroad track; recaptured about four hundred of our men on their way to Richmond as prisoners of war; met and defeated the enemy's cavalry at Yellow Tavern; carried the first line of works around Richmond, but (finding the second line too strong to be carried by assault), recrossed to the north bank of the Chickahominy at Meadow Bridge under heavy fire; and moved by a detour to Haxall's Landing, on the James River, where he communicated with General Butler. This raid had the effect of drawing off the whole of the enemy's cavalry force, making it comparatively easy to guard our trains.

General Butler moved his main force up the James River, in pursuance of instructions, on the 4th of May, General Gillmore having joined him with the Tenth Corps. At the same time he sent a force of eighteen hundred cavalry, by way of West Point, to form a junction with him wherever he might get a foothold, and a force of three thousand cavalry, under General Kautz, from Suffolk, to operate against the road south of Petersburg and Richmond. On the 5th he occupied, without opposition, both City Point and Bermuda Hundred, his movement being a complete surprise. On the 6th he was in position with his main army, and commenced intrenching. On the 7th he made a reconnaissance against the Petersburg and Richmond railroad, destroying a portion of it after some fighting. On the 9th he telegraphed as follows:

Headquarters near Bermuda Landing,
May 9, 1864.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

Our operations may be summed up in a few words. With seventeen hundred cavalry we have advanced up the Peninsula, forced the Chickahominy, and have safely brought them to their present position. These were colored cavalry, and are now holding our advance pickets toward Richmond.

General Kantz, with three thousand cavalry from Suffolk, on the same day with our movement up James River, forced the Black Water, burned the railroad-bridge at Stony Creek, below Petersburg, cutting into Beauregard’s force at that point.

We have landed here, intrenched ourselves, destroyed many miles of railroad, and got a position which, with proper supplies, we can hold out against the whole of Lee’s army. I have ordered up the supplies.

Beauregard, with a large portion of his force, was left south by the cutting of the railroads by Kautz. That portion which reached Petersburg under Hill I have whipped to-day, killing and wounding many, and taking many prisoners, after a severe and well-contested fight.

General Grant will not be troubled with any further reinforcements to Lee from Beauregard’s force.

Benj. F. Butler,
Major-General.

On the evening of the 13th and morning of the 14th he carried a portion of the enemy’s first line of defenses at Drury’s Bluff, or Fort Darling, with small loss. The time thus consumed from the 6th lost to us the benefit of the surprise and capture of Richmond and Petersburg, enabling, as it did, Beauregard to collect his loose forces in North and South Carolina, and bring them to the defense of those places. On the 16th the enemy attacked General Butler in his position in front of Drury’s Bluff. He was forced back, or drew back, into his intrenchments between the forks of the James and Appomattox rivers, the enemy intrenching strongly in his front, thus covering his railroads, the city, and all that was valuable to him. His army, therefore, though in a position of great security, was as completely shut off from further operations directly against Richmond as if it had been in a bottle strongly corked. It required but a comparatively small force of the enemy to hold it there.

On the 12th, General Kantz, with his cavalry, was started on a raid against the Danville railroad, which he struck at Coalfield, Powhatan, and Chula stations, destroying them, the railroad track, two freight-trains, and one locomotive, together with large quantities of commissary and other stores; thence, crossing to the South Side road, struck it at Wilson’s, Wells ville, and Black’s and White’s stations, destroying the road and station-houses; thence he proceeded to City Point, which he reached on the 18th.

On the 19th of April, and prior to the movement of General Butler, the enemy, with a land force under General Hoke and an iron-clad ram, attacked Plymouth, North Carolina, commanded by General H. W. Wessells, and our gunboats there; and after severe fighting the place was carried by assault, and the entire garrison and armament captured. The gunboat Smithfield was sunk and the Miami disabled.
The army sent to operate against Richmond having hermetically sealed itself up at Bermuda Hundred, the enemy was enabled to bring the most, if not all, the reinforcements brought from the south by Beauregard against the Army of the Potomac. In addition to this reinforcement a very considerable one—probably not less than fifteen thousand men—was obtained by calling in the scattered troops under Breckinridge from the western part of Virginia.

The position of Bermuda Hundred was as easy to defend as it was difficult to operate from against the enemy. I determined, therefore, to bring from it all available forces, leaving enough only to secure what had been gained; and accordingly, on the 22d, I directed that they be sent forward under command of Major-General W. F. Smith, to join the Army of the Potomac.

On the 24th of May the Ninth Army-corps, commanded by Major-General A. E. Burnside, was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, and from this time forward constituted a portion of Major-General Meade's command.

Finding the enemy's position on the North Anna stronger than either of his previous ones, I withdrew on the night of the 26th to the north bank of the North Anna, and moved via Hanover Town to turn the enemy's position by his right.

Generals Torbert's and Merritt's divisions of cavalry, under Sheridan, and the Sixth Corps, led the advance, crossed the Pamunkey River at Hanover Town, after considerable fighting, and on the 28th the two divisions of cavalry had a severe but successful engagement with the enemy at Hawes's Shop. On the 29th and 30th we advanced, with heavy skirmishing, to the Hanover Court House and Cold Harbor road, and developed the enemy's position north of the Chickahominy. Late on the evening of the last day the enemy came out and attacked our left, but was repulsed with very considerable loss. An attack was immediately ordered by General Meade along his whole line, which resulted in driving the enemy from a part of his entrenched skirmish-line.

On the 31st General Wilson's division of cavalry destroyed the railroad-bridges over the South Anna River, after defeating the enemy's cavalry. General Sheridan on the same day reached Cold Harbor, and held it until relieved by the Sixth Corps and General Smith's command, which had just arrived, via White House, from General Butler's army.

On the first day of June an attack was made at 5 p.m. by the Sixth Corps and the troops under General Smith, the other corps being held in readiness to advance on the receipt of orders. This resulted in our carrying and holding the enemy's first line of works in front of the right of the Sixth Corps, and in front of General Smith. During the attack the enemy made repeated assaults on each of the corps not engaged in the main attack, but was repulsed with heavy loss in every instance. That night he made several assaults to regain what he had lost in the day, but failed. The 2d was spent in getting troops into position for an attack on the 3d. On the 3d of June we again assaulted the enemy's works, in the hope of driving him from his position. In this attempt our loss was heavy, while that of the enemy, I have reason to believe, was comparatively light. It was the only general attack made from the Rapidan to the James which did not inflict upon the enemy losses to compensate for our own losses. I would not be understood as saying that all previous attacks resulted in victories to our arms, or accomplished as much as I had hoped from them; but they inflicted upon the enemy severe losses, which tended in the end to the complete overthrow of the rebellion.

From the proximity of the enemy to his defenses around Richmond, it was impossible, by any flank movement, to interpose between him and the city. I was still in a condition to either move by his left flank, and invest Richmond from the north side, or continue my move by his right flank to the south side of the James. While the former might have been better as a covering for Washington, yet a full survey of all the ground satisfied me that it would be impracticable to hold a line north and east of Richmond that would protect the Fredericksburg railroad—a long, vulnerable line, which would exhaust much of our strength to guard, and that would have to be protected to supply the army, and would leave open to the enemy all his lines of communication on the south side of the James. My idea from the start had been to beat Lee's army north of Richmond, if possible; then, after destroying his lines of communication north of the James River, to transfer the army to the south side, and besiege Lee in Richmond, or follow him south if he should retreat. After the battle of the Wilderness it was evident that the enemy deemed it of the first importance to run no risks with the army he then had. He acted purely on the defensive behind breastworks, or feebly on the offensive immediately in front of them, and where, in case of repulse, he could easily retire behind them. Without a greater sacrifice of life than I was willing to make, all could not be accomplished that I had designed north of Richmond. I therefore determined to continue to hold substantially the ground we then occupied, taking advantage of any favorable circumstances that might present themselves, until the cavalry could be sent to Charlottesville and Gordonsville to effectually break up the railroad connection between Richmond and the Shenandoah Valley and Lynchburg; and when the cavalry got well off, to move the army to the south side of the James River, by the enemy's right flank, where I felt I could cut off all his sources of supply, except by the canal.

On the 7th two divisions of cavalry, under General Sheridan, got off on the expedition against the Virginia Central railroad, with instructions to Hunter—whom I hoped he would meet near Charlottesville—to join his forces to Sheridan's, and after the work laid out for them was thoroughly done, to join the Army of the Potomac by the route laid down in Sheridan's instructions.

On the 10th of June General Butler sent a force of infantry under General Gillmore, and of cavalry under General Kautz, to capture Petersburg, if possible, and destroy the railroad and common bridges across the Appomattox. The cavalry carried the works on the south side, and penetrated well in toward the town, but were forced to retire. General Gillmore, finding the works which he approached very strong, and deeming an assault impracticable, returned to Bermuda Hundred without attempting one.

Attaching great importance to the possession of Petersburg, I sent back to Bermuda Hundred and City Point General Smith's command by water via the White House, to reach there in advance of the Army of the Potomac. This was for the express purpose of securing Petersburg before the enemy, becoming aware of our intention, could reinforce the place.

The movement from Cold Harbor commenced after dark on the evening of the 12th. One division of cavalry, under General Wilson, and the Fifth Corps, crossed the Chickahominy at Long Bridge, and moved out to White Oak Swamp, to cover the crossings of the other corps. The advance corps reached James River, at Wilcox's Landing and Charles City Court House, on the night of the 13th.

During three long years the Armies of the Potomac and Northern Virginia had been confronting each other. In that time they had fought more desperate battles than it probably ever before fell to the lot of two armies to fight, without materially changing the vantage-ground of either. The Southern press and people, with more shrewdness than was displayed in the North, finding that they had failed to capture Washington and march on to New York, as they had boasted they would do, assumed that they only defended their capital and Southern territory. Hence Antietam, Gettysburg, and all the other battles that had been fought, were by them set down as failures on our part, and victories for them. Their army believed this. It produced a morale which could only be overcome by desperate and continuous hard fighting. The battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, and Cold Harbor, bloody and terrible as they were on our side, were even more damaging to the enemy, and so crippled him as to make him wary ever after of taking the offensive. His losses in men were probably not so great, owing to the fact that we were, save in the Wilderness, almost invariably the attacking party; and when he did attack, it was in the open field. The details of these battles, which for endurance and bravery on the part of the soldiery have rarely been surpassed, are given in the report of Major-General Meade, and the subordinate reports accompanying it.
During the campaign of forty-three days, from the Rapidan to the James River, the army had to be supplied from an ever-shifting base, by wagons, over narrow roads, through a densely wooded country, with a lack of wharves at each new base from which to conveniently discharge vessels. Too much credit cannot, therefore, be awarded to the quartermaster and commissary departments for the zeal and efficiency displayed by them. Under the general supervision of the chief quartermaster, Brigadier-General R. Ingalls, the trains were made to occupy all the available roads between the army and our water-base; and but little difficulty was experienced in protecting them.

The movement in the Kanawha and Shenandoah valleys, under General Sigel, commenced on the 1st of May. General Crook, who had the immediate command of the Kanawha expedition, divided his forces into two columns, giving one, composed of cavalry, to General Averell. They crossed the mountains by separate routes. Averell struck the Tennessee and Virginia railroad, near Wytheville, on the 10th, and proceeding to New River and Christiansburg, destroyed the road, several important bridges and depots, including New River Bridge, forming a junction with Crook at Union on the 15th. General Sigel moved up the Shenandoah Valley, met the enemy at New Market on the 15th, and, after a severe engagement, was defeated with heavy loss, and retired behind Cedar Creek. Not regarding the operations of General Sigel as satisfactory, I asked his removal from command, and Major-General Hunter was appointed to supersede him. His instructions were embraced in the following despatches to Major-General H. W. Halleck, chief of staff of the army:

NEAR SPOTTSYLVANIA COURT HOUSE, VIRGINIA, May 20, 1864.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The enemy are evidently relying for supplies greatly on such as are brought over the branch road running through Staunton. On the whole, therefore, I think it would be better for General Hunter to move in that direction; reach Staunton and Gordonsville or Charlottesville, if he does not meet too much opposition. If he can hold at bay a force equal to his own, he will be doing good service. . . .

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

MAJOR-GENERAL H. W. HALLECK.

JERICHO FORD, VIRGINIA, May 25, 1864.

If Hunter can possibly get to Charlottesville and Lynchburg, he should do so, living on the country. The railroads and canal should be destroyed beyond possibility of repairs for weeks. Completing this, he could find his way back to his original base, or from about Gordonsville join this army.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

MAJOR-GENERAL H. W. HALLECK.
General Hunter immediately took up the offensive, and, moving up the Shenandoah Valley, met the enemy on the 5th of June at Piedmont, and, after a battle of ten hours, routed and defeated him, capturing on the field of battle fifteen hundred men, three pieces of artillery, and three hundred stand of small arms. On the 8th of the same month he formed a junction with Crook and Averell at Stanuton, from which place he moved direct on Lynchburg via Lexington, which place he reached and invested on the sixteenth day of June. Up to this time he was very successful, and but for the difficulty of taking with him sufficient ordnance stores over so long a march through a hostile country, he would no doubt have captured that, to the enemy important, point. The destruction of the enemy's supplies and manufactories was very great. To meet this movement under General Hunter, General Lee sent a force, perhaps equal to a corps, a part of which reached Lynchburg a short time before Hunter. After some skirmishing on the 17th and 18th, General Hunter, owing to a want of ammunition to give battle, retired from before the place. Unfortunately this want of ammunition left him no choice of route for his return but by way of Kanawha. This lost to us the use of his troops for several weeks from the defense of the North.

Had General Hunter moved by way of Charlottesville instead of Lexington, as his instructions contemplated, he would have been in a position to have covered the Shenandoah Valley against the enemy, should the force he met have seemed to endanger it. If it did not he would have been within easy distance of the James River Canal, on the main line of communication between Lynchburg and the force sent for its defense. I have never taken exception to the operations of General Hunter, and am not now disposed to find fault with him, for I have no doubt he acted within what he conceived to be the spirit of his instructions and the interests of the service. The promptitude of his movements and his gallantry should entitle him to the commendation of his country.

To return to the Army of the Potomac. The Second Corps commenced crossing the James River on the morning of the 14th by ferry-boats at Wilcox's Landing. The laying of the pontoon-bridge was completed about midnight of the 14th, and the crossing of the balance of the army was rapidly pushed forward by both bridge and ferry.

After the crossing had commenced, I proceeded by steamer to Bermuda Hundred to give the necessary orders for the immediate capture of Petersburg.

The instructions to General Butler were verbal, and were for him to send General Smith immediately, that night, with all the troops he could give him without sacrificing the position he then held. I told him that I would return at once to the Army of the Potomac, hasten its crossing, and throw it forward to Petersburg by divisions.
as rapidly as it could be done; that we could reinforce our armies more rapidly there than the enemy could bring troops against us. General Smith got off as directed, and confronted the enemy's pickets near Petersburg before daylight next morning, but, for some reason that I have never been able to satisfactorily understand, did not get ready to assault his main lines until near sundown. Then, with a part of his command only, he made the assault, and carried the lines north-east of Petersburg from the Appomattox River for a distance of over two and a half miles, capturing fifteen pieces of artillery and three hundred prisoners. This was about 7 p.m. Between the line thus captured and Petersburg there were no other works, and there was no evidence that the enemy had reinforced Petersburg with a single brigade from any source. The night was clear—the moon shining brightly—and favorable to further operations. General Hancock, with two divisions of the Second Corps, reached General Smith just after dark, and offered the service of these troops as he (Smith) might wish, waiving rank to the named commander, who he naturally supposed knew best the position of affairs, and what to do with the troops. But instead of taking these troops and pushing at once into Petersburg, he requested General Hancock to relieve a part of his line in the captured works, which was done before midnight.

By the time I arrived the next morning the enemy was in force. An attack was ordered to be made at six o'clock that evening by the troops under Smith and the Second and Ninth corps. It required until that time for the Ninth Corps to get up and into position. The attack was made as ordered, and the fighting continued with but little intermission until six o'clock the next morning, and resulted in our carrying the advance and some of the main works of the enemy to the right (our left) of those previously captured by General Smith, several pieces of artillery, and over four hundred prisoners.

The Fifth Corps having got up, the attacks were renewed and persisted in with great vigor on the 17th and 18th, but only resulted in forcing the enemy into an interior line, from which he could not be dislodged. The advantages of position gained by us were very great. The army then proceeded to envelop Petersburg toward the South Side railroad, as far as possible without attacking fortifications.

On the 16th the enemy, to reinforce Petersburg, withdrew from a part of his intrenchment in front of Bermuda Hundred, expecting, no doubt, to get troops from north of the James to take the place of those withdrawn before we could discover it. General Butler, taking advantage of this, at once moved a force on the railroad between Petersburg and Richmond. As soon as I was apprised of the advantage thus gained, to retain it I ordered two divisions of the Sixth Corps, General Wright commanding, that were embarking at Wilcox's Landing, under orders for City Point, to report to General Butler at Bermuda Hundred, of which General Butler was notified, and the importance of holding a position in advance of his present line urged upon him.

About two o'clock in the afternoon General Butler was forced back to the line the enemy had withdrawn from in the morning. General Wright, with his two divisions, joined General Butler on the forenoon of the 17th, the latter still holding with a strong picket-line the enemy's works. But instead of putting these divisions into the enemy's works to hold them, he permitted them to halt and rest some distance in the rear of his own line. Between four and five o'clock in the afternoon the enemy attacked and drove in his pickets and re-occupied his old line.

On the night of the 20th and morning of the 21st a lodgment was effected by General Butler, with one brigade of infantry, on the north bank of the James, at Deep Bottom, and connected by pontoon-bridge with Bermuda Hundred.

On the 19th General Sheridan, on his return from his expedition against the Virginia Central railroad, arrived at the White House just as the enemy's cavalry was about to attack it, and compelled it to retire. The result of this expedition was that General Sheridan met the enemy's cavalry near Trevilian Station, on the morning of the 11th of June, whom he attacked, and after an obstinate contest drove from the field in complete rout. He left his dead and nearly all his wounded in our hands, and about four hundred prisoners and several hundred horses. On the 12th he destroyed the railroad from Trevilian Station to Louisa Court House. This occupied until 3 P.M., when he advanced in the direction of Gordonsville. He found the enemy reinforced by infantry, behind well-constructed rifle-pits, about five miles from the latter place, and too strong to successfully assault. On the extreme right, however, his reserve brigade carried the enemy's works twice, and was twice driven therewith by infantry. Night closed the contest. Not having sufficient ammunition to continue the engagement, and his animals being without forage (the country furnishing but inferior grazing), and hearing nothing from General Hunter, he withdrew his command to the north side of the North Anna, and commenced his return march, reaching White House at the time before stated. After breaking up the depot at that place, he moved to the James River, which he reached safely after heavy fighting. He commenced crossing on the 25th, near Fort Powhatan, without further molestation, and rejoined the Army of the Potomac.

On the 22d General Wilson, with his own division of cavalry of the Army of the Potomac, and General Kautz's division of cavalry of the Army of the James, moved against the enemy's railroads south of Richmond. Striking the Weldon railroad at Ream's Station, destroying the depot and several miles of the road, and the South Side road about fifteen miles from Petersburg to near Nottoway Station, where he met and defeated a force of the enemy's cavalry. He reached Burkesville Station on the afternoon of the 23d, and from there destroyed the Danville railroad to Roanoke Bridge,—a distance of twenty-five miles,—where he found the enemy in force and in a position from which he could not dislodge him. He then commenced his return march, and on the 28th met the enemy's cavalry in force at the Weldon railroad crossing of Stony Creek, where he had a severe but not decisive engagement. Thence he made a detour from his left with a view of reaching Reams's Station (supposing it to be in our possession). At this place he was met by the enemy's cavalry, supported by infantry, and forced to retire, with the loss of his artillery and trains. In this last encounter General Kautz, with a part of his command, became separated, and made his way into our lines. General Wilson, with the remainder of his force, succeeded in crossing the Nottoway River and coming in safely on our left and rear. The damage to the enemy in this expedition more than compensated for the losses we sustained. It severed all connection by railroad with Richmond for several weeks.

With a view of cutting the enemy's railroad from near Richmond to the Anna rivers, and making him wary of the situation of his army in the Shenandoah; and, in the event of failure in this, to take advantage of his necessary withdrawal of troops from Petersburg, to explode a mine that had been prepared in front of the Ninth Corps and assault the enemy's lines at that place, on the night of the 26th of July the Second Corps and two divisions of the cavalry corps and Kautz's cavalry were crossed to the north bank of the James River, and joined the force General Butler had there. On the 27th the enemy was driven from his intrenched position, with the loss of four pieces of artillery. On the 28th our lines were extended from Deep Bottom to New Market road, but in getting this position were attacked by the enemy in heavy force. The fighting lasted for several hours, resulting in considerable loss to both sides. The first object of this move having failed, by reason of the very large force thrown there by the enemy, I determined to take advantage of the diversion made, by assaulting Petersburg before he could get his force back there. One division of the Second Corps was withdrawn on the night of the 28th, and moved during the night to the rear of the Eighteenth Corps, to relieve that corps in the line, that it might be foot-loose in the assault to be made. The other two divisions of the Second Corps and Sheridan's cavalry were crossed over on the night of the 29th and moved in front of Petersburg. On the morning of the 30th, between four and five o'clock, the mine was sprung, blowing up a battery and most of a regiment; and the advance of the assaulting column, formed of the Ninth Corps, immediately took possession of the crater made by the explosion, and the line for some distance to the right and left of it, and a detached line in front of it, but for some cause failed to advance promptly to the ridge beyond.
Had they done this I have every reason to believe that Petersburg would have fallen. Other troops were immediately pushed forward, but the time consumed in getting them up enabled the enemy to rally from his surprise (which had been complete) and get forces to this point for its defense. The captured line thus held being untenable and of no advantage to us, the troops were withdrawn, but not without heavy loss. Thus terminated in disaster what promised to be the most successful assault of the campaign.

Immediately upon the enemy's ascertaining that General Hunter was retiring from Lynchburg by way of the Kanawha River, thus laying the Shenandoah Valley open for raids into Maryland and Pennsylvania, he returned northward and moved down that valley. As soon as this movement of the enemy was ascertained, General Hunter, who had reached the Kanawha River, was directed to move his troops without delay, by river and railroad, to Harper's Ferry; but owing to the difficulty of navigation by reason of low water and breaks in the railroad, great delay was experienced in getting there. It became necessary, therefore, to find other troops to check this movement of the enemy. For this purpose the Sixth Corps was taken from the armies operating against Richmond, to which was added the Nineteenth Corps, then fortunately beginning to arrive in Hampton Roads from the Gulf Department, under orders issued immediately after the ascertainment of the result of the Red River expedition. The garrisons of Baltimore and Washington were at this time made up of heavy artillery regiments, hundred-days' men, and detachments from the invalid corps. One division, under command of General Ricketts, of the Sixth Corps was sent to Baltimore, and the remaining two divisions of the Sixth Corps, under General Wright, were subsequently sent to Washington. On the 3d of July the enemy approached Martinsburg. General Sigel, who was in command of our forces there, retreated across the Potomac at Shepherdstown, and General Weber, commanding at Harper's Ferry, crossed the river and occupied Maryland Heights. On the 6th the enemy occupied Hagerstown, moving a strong column toward Frederick City. General Wallace, with Ricketts's division and his own command, the latter mostly new and undisciplined troops, pushed out from Baltimore with great promptness, and met the enemy in force on the Monocacy, near the crossing of the railroad-bridge. His force was not sufficient to ensure success; but he fought the enemy nevertheless, and although it resulted in a defeat to our arms, yet it detained the enemy, and thereby served to enable General Wright to reach Washington with two divisions of the Sixth Corps, and the advance of the Nineteenth Corps before him. From Monocacy the enemy moved on Washington, his cavalry advance reaching Rockville on the evening of the 10th. On the 12th a reconnaissance was thrown out in front of Fort Stevens, to ascertain the enemy's position and force. A severe skirmish ensued, in which we lost about two hundred and eighty in killed and wounded. The enemy's loss was probably greater. He commenced retreating during the night. Learning the exact condition of affairs at Washington, I requested by telegraph, at forty-five minutes past 11 P.M., on the 12th, the assignment of Major-General H. G. Wright to the command of all the troops that could be made available to operate in the field against the enemy, and directed that he should get outside of the trenches with all the force he could, and push Early to the last moment. General Wright commenced the pursuit on the 13th; on the 18th the enemy was overtaken at Snicker's ferry, on the Shenandoah, when a sharp skirmish occurred; and on the 20th General Averell encountered and defeated a portion of the rebel army at Winchester, capturing four pieces of artillery and several hundred prisoners.

Learning that Early was retreating south toward Lynchburg or Richmond, I directed that the Sixth and Nineteenth corps be got back to the armies operating against Richmond, so that they might be used in a movement against Lee before the return of the troops sent by him into the Valley; and that Hunter should remain in the Shenandoah Valley, keeping between any force of the enemy and Washington, acting on the defensive as much as possible. I felt that if the enemy had any notion of returning, the fact would be developed before the Sixth and Nineteenth corps could leave Washington. Subsequently the Nineteenth Corps was excepted from the order to return to the James.

About the 25th it became evident that the enemy was again advancing upon Maryland and Pennsylvania, and the Sixth Corps, then at Washington, was ordered back to the vicinity of Harper's Ferry. The rebel force moved down the Valley, and sent a raiding party into Pennsylvania, which on the 30th burned Chambersburg, and then retreated, pursued by our cavalry, toward Cumberland. They were met and defeated by General Kelley, and with diminished numbers escaped into the mountains of West Virginia. From the time of the first raid the telegraph-wires were frequently down between Washington and City Point, making it necessary to transmit messages a part of the way by boat. It took from twenty-four to thirty-six hours to get despatches through and return answers back; so that often orders would be given, and then information would be received showing a different state of facts from those on which they were based, causing a confusion and apparent contradiction of orders that must have considerably embarrassed those who had to execute them, and rendered operations against the enemy less effective than they otherwise would have been. To remedy this evil it was evident to my mind that some person should have the supreme command of all the forces in the Departments of West Virginia, Washington, Susquehanna, and the Middle Department, and I so recommended.
On the 2d of August I ordered General Sheridan to report in person to Major-General Halleck, chief of staff, at Washington, with a view to his assignment to the command of all the forces against Early. At this time the enemy was concentrated in the neighborhood of Winchester, while our forces, under General Hunter, were concentrated on the Monocacy, at the crossing of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, leaving open to the enemy western Maryland and southern Pennsylvania. From where I was I hesitated to give positive orders for the movement of our forces at Monocacy, lest by so doing I should expose Washington. Therefore on the 4th I left City Point to visit Hunter's command and determine for myself what was best to be done. On arrival there, and after consultation with General Hunter, I issued to him the following instructions:

Monocacy Bridge, Maryland, August 5, 1864, 8 p.m.

General: Concentrate all your available force without delay in the vicinity of Harper's Ferry, leaving only such railroad guards and garrisons for public property as may be necessary. Use, in this concentrating, the railroad, if by so doing time can be saved. From Harper's Ferry, if it is found that the enemy has moved north of the Potomac in large force, push north, following him and attacking him wherever found; follow him, if driven south of the Potomac, as long as it is safe to do so. If it is ascertained that the enemy has but a small force north of the Potomac, then push south with the main force, detaching under a competent commander a sufficient force to look after the raiders and drive them to their homes. In detaching such a force, the brigade of cavalry now en route from Washington via Rockville may be taken into account.

There are now on their way to join you three other brigades of the best cavalry, numbering at least five thousand men and horses. These will be instructed, in the absence of further orders, to join you by the south side of the Potomac. One brigade will probably start to-morrow. In pushing up the Shenandoah Valley, where it is expected you will have to go first or last, it is desirable that nothing should be left to invite the enemy to return. Take all provisions, forage, and stock wanted for the use of your command; such as cannot be consumed, destroy. It is not desirable that the buildings should be destroyed—they should rather be protected; but the people should be informed that, so long as an army can subsist among them, recurrences of these raids must be expected, and we are determined to stop them at all hazards.

Bear in mind, the object is to drive the enemy south; and to do this, you want to keep him always in sight. Be guided in your course by the course he takes.

Make your own arrangements for supplies of all kinds, giving regular vouchers for such as may be taken from loyal citizens in the country through which you march.

U. S. Grant,

Lieutenant-General.

The troops were immediately put in motion, and the advance reached Halltown that night.
General Hunter having, in our conversation, expressed a willingness to be relieved from command, I telegraphed to have General Sheridan, then at Washington, sent to Harper's Ferry, by the morning train, with orders to take general command of all the troops in the field, and to call on General Hunter at Monocacy, who would turn over to him my letter of instructions. I remained at Monocacy until General Sheridan arrived, on the morning of the 6th; and after a conference with him in relation to military affairs in that vicinity, I returned to City Point by way of Washington.

On the 7th of August the Middle Department and the Departments of West Virginia, Washington, and Susquehanna were constituted into the "Middle Military Division," and Major-General Sheridan was assigned to temporary command of the same.

Two divisions of cavalry, commanded by Generals Torbert and Wilson, were sent to Sheridan from the Army of the Potomac. The first reached him at Harper's Ferry about the 11th of August.

His operations during the month of August and the fore part of September were both of an offensive and defensive character, resulting in many severe skirmishes, principally by the cavalry, in which we were generally successful; but no general engagement took place. The two armies lay in such a position—the enemy on the west bank of the Opequan Creek covering Winchester, and our forces in front of Berryville—that either could bring on a battle at any time. Defeat to us would lay open to the enemy the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania for long distances before another army could be interposed to check him. Under these circumstances I hesitated about allowing the initiative to be taken. Finally the use of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, which were both obstructed by the enemy, became so indispensably necessary to us, and the importance of relieving Pennsylvania and Maryland from continuously threatened invasion so great, that I determined the risk should be taken. But fearing to telegraph the order for an attack without knowing more than I did of General Sheridan's feelings as to what would be the probable result, I left City Point on the 15th of September to visit him at his headquarters, to decide, after conference with him, what should be done. I met him at Charlestown, and he pointed out so distinctly how each army lay, what he could do the moment he was authorized, and expressed such confidence of success, that I saw there were but two words of instruction necessary—Go in! For the convenience of forage the teams for supplying the army were kept at Harper's Ferry. I asked him if he could get out his teams and supplies in time to make an attack on the ensuing Tuesday morning. His reply was that he could before daylight on Monday. He was off promptly to time, and I may here add that the result was such that I have never since deemed it necessary to visit General Sheridan before giving him orders.
Early on the morning of the 19th General Sheridan attacked General Early at the crossing on the Opequan Creek, and after a most sanguinary and bloody battle, lasting until five o'clock in the evening, defeated him with heavy loss, carrying his entire position from Opequan Creek to Winchester, capturing several thousand prisoners and five pieces of artillery. The enemy rallied, and made a stand in a strong position at Fisher's Hill, where he was attacked and again defeated with heavy loss on the 20th [22d]. Sheridan pursued him with great energy through Harrisonburg, Stanston, and the gaps of the Blue Ridge. After stripping the upper valley of most of the supplies and provisions for the rebel army, he returned to Strasburg, and took position on the north side of Cedar Creek.

Having received considerable reinforcements, General Early again returned to the Valley, and on the 9th of October his cavalry encountered ours near Strasburg, where the rebels were defeated, with the loss of eleven pieces of artillery and three hundred and fifty prisoners. On the night of the 18th the enemy crossed the mountains which separate the branches of the Shenandoah, forded the North Fork, and early on the morning of the 19th, under cover of the darkness and the fog, surprised and turned our left flank, and captured the batteries which enfiladed our whole line. Our troops fell back with heavy loss and in much confusion, but were finally rallied between Middletown and Newtown. At this juncture General Sheridan, who was at Winchester when the battle commenced, arrived on the field, arranged his lines just in time to repulse a heavy attack of the enemy, and immediately assuming the offensive, he attacked in turn with great vigor. The enemy was defeated with great slaughter and the loss of most of his artillery and trains, and the trophies he had captured in the morning. The wreck of his army escaped during the night, and fled in the direction of Stanston and Lynchburg. Pursuit was made to Mount Jackson. Thus ended this the enemy's last attempt to invade the North via the Shenandoah Valley. I was now enabled to return the Sixth Corps to the Army of the Potomac, and to send one division from Sheridan's army to the Army of the James, and another to Savannah, Georgia, to hold Sherman's new acquisitions on the sea-coast, and thus enable him to move without detaching from his force for that purpose.

Reports from various sources led me to believe that the enemy had detached three divisions from Petersburg to reinforce Early in the Shenandoah Valley. I therefore sent the Second Corps and Gregg's division of cavalry, of the Army of the Potomac, and a force of General Butler's army, on the night of the 13th of August, to threaten Richmond from the north side of the James, to prevent him from sending troops away, and, if possible, to draw back those sent. In this move we captured six pieces of artillery and several hundred prisoners, detained troops that were under marching orders, and ascertained that but one division (Kershaw's) of the three reputed detached had gone.

The enemy having withdrawn heavily from Petersburg to resist this movement, the Fifth Corps, General Warren commanding, was moved out on the 18th, and took possession of the Weldon railroad. During the day he had considerable fighting. To regain possession of the road the enemy made repeated and desperate assaults, but was each time repulsed with great loss. On the night of the 20th the troops on the north side of the James were withdrawn, and Hancock and Gregg returned to the front at Petersburg. On the 25th the Second Corps and Gregg's division of cavalry, while at Reams's Station destroying the railroad, were attacked, and after desperate fighting a part of our line gave way, and five pieces of artillery fell into the hands of the enemy.

By the 12th of September a branch railroad was completed from the City Point and Petersburg railroad to the Weldon railroad, enabling us to supply, without difficulty, in all weather, the army in front of Petersburg.

The extension of our lines across the Weldon railroad compelled the enemy to so extend his that it seemed he could have but few troops north of the James for the defense of Richmond. On the night of the 28th the Tenth Corps, Major-General Birney, and the Eighteenth Corps, Major-General Ord commanding, of General Butler's army, were crossed to the north side of the James, and advanced on the morning of the 29th, carrying the very strong fortifications and intrenchments below Chaffin's Farm, known as Fort Harrison, capturing fifteen pieces of artillery and the New Market road and intrenchments. This success was followed up by a gallant assault upon Fort Gilmer, immediately in front of the Chaffin Farm fortifications, in which we were repulsed with heavy loss. Kautz's cavalry was pushed forward on the road to the right of this, supported by infantry, and reached the enemy's inner line, but was unable to get farther. The position captured from the enemy was so threatening to Richmond that I determined to hold it. The enemy made several desperate attempts to dislodge us, all of which were unsuccessful, and for which he paid dearly. On the morning of the 30th General Meade sent out a reconnaissance, with a view to attacking the enemy's line if it was found sufficiently weakened by withdrawal of troops to the north side. In this reconnaissance we captured and held the enemy's works near Poplar Spring Church. In the afternoon troops moving to get to the left of the point gained were attacked by the enemy in heavy force, and compelled to fall back until supported by the forces holding the captured works. Our cavalry under Gregg was also attacked, but repulsed the enemy with great loss.

On the 7th of October the enemy attacked Kautz's cavalry north of the James, and drove it back with heavy loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners, and the loss of all the artillery—eight or nine pieces. This he followed up by an attack on our intrenched infantry line, but was repulsed with severe slaughter. On the 13th a reconnaissance was sent out by General Butler, with a view to drive the enemy from some new works he was constructing, which resulted in very heavy loss to us.

On the 27th the Army of the Potomac, leaving only sufficient men to hold its fortified line, moved by the enemy’s right flank. The Second Corps, followed by two divisions of the Fifth Corps, with the cavalry in advance and covering our left flank, forced a passage of Hatcher’s Run, and moved up the south side of it toward the South Side railroad, until the Second Corps and part of the cavalry reached the Boydton plank road where it crosses Hatcher’s Run. At this point we were six miles distant from the South Side railroad, which I had hoped by this movement to reach and hold. But finding that we had not reached the end of the enemy's fortifications, and no place presenting itself for a successful assault by which he might be doubled up and shortened, I determined to withdraw to within our fortified line. Orders were given accordingly. Immediately upon receiving a report that General Warren had connected with General Hancock, I returned to my headquarters. Soon after I left, the enemy moved out across Hatcher’s Run, in the gap between Generals Hancock and Warren, which was not closed as reported, and made a desperate attack on General Hancock’s right and rear. General Hancock immediately faced his corps to meet it, and after a bloody combat drove the enemy within his works, and withdrew that night to his old position.

In support of this movement General Butler made a demonstration on the north side of the James, and attacked the enemy on the Williamsburg road, and also on the York River railroad. In the former he was unsuccessful; in the latter he succeeded in carrying a work, which was afterward abandoned and his forces withdrawn to their former positions.

From this time forward the operations in front of Petersburg and Richmond, until the spring campaign of 1865, were confined to the defense and extension of our lines, and to offensive movements for crippling the enemy’s lines of communication, and to prevent his detaching any considerable force to send south. By the 7th of February our lines were extended to Hatcher’s Run, and the Weldon railroad had been destroyed to Hicksford.

General Sherman moved from Chattanooga on the 6th of May, with the Armies of the Cumberland, Tennessee, and Ohio, commanded respectively by Generals Thomas, McPherson, and Schofield, upon Johnston’s army at Dalton; but finding the enemy's position at Buzzard's Roost, covering Dalton, too strong to be assaulted, General McPherson was sent through Snake Gap to turn it, while Generals Thomas and Schofield threatened it in front and on the north. This movement was successful. Johnston, finding his retreat likely to be cut off, fell back to his fortified position at Resaca, where he was attacked on the afternoon of May 15th. A heavy battle ensued. During the night the enemy retreated south. Late on the 17th his rear-guard was overtaken near Adairsville, and heavy skirmishing followed. The next morning, however, he had again disappeared. He was vigorously pursued, and was overtaken at Cassville on the 19th, but during the ensuing night retreated across the Etowah. While these operations were going on, General Jefferson C. Davis's division of Thomas's army was sent to Rome, capturing it, with its forts and artillery and its valuable mills and foundries. General Sherman, having given his army a few days' rest at this point, again put it in motion on the 23d for Dallas, with a view of turning the difficult pass at Allatoona. On the afternoon of the 25th the advance, under General Hooker, had a severe battle with the enemy, driving him back to New Hope Church, near Dallas. Several sharp encounters occurred at this point. The most important was on the 28th, when the enemy assaulted General McPherson at Dallas, but received a terrible and bloody repulse.

On the 4th of June Johnston abandoned his intrenched position at New Hope Church, and retreated to the strong positions of Kenesaw, Pine, and Lost mountains. He was forced to yield the two last-named places and concentrate his army on Kenesaw, where, on the 27th, Generals Thomas and McPherson made a determined but unsuccessful assault. On the night of the 2d of July Sherman commenced moving his army by the right flank, and on the morning of the 3d found that the enemy, in consequence of this movement, had abandoned Kenesaw and retreated across the Chattahoochee.

General Sherman remained on the Chattahoochee, to give his men rest and get up stores, until the 17th of July, when he resumed his operations, crossed the Chattahoochee, destroyed a large portion of the railroad to Augusta, and drove the enemy back to Atlanta. At this place General Hood succeeded General Johnston in command of the rebel army, and assuming the offensive-defensive policy, made several severe attacks upon Sherman in the vicinity of Atlanta, the most desperate and determined of which was on the 22d of July. About 1 P.M. of this day the brave, accomplished, and noble-hearted McPherson was killed. General Logan succeeded him, and commanded the Army of the Tennessee, through this desperate battle and until he was superseded by Major-General Howard, on the 26th, with the same success and ability that had characterized him in the command of a corps or division.

In all these attacks the enemy was repulsed with great loss. Finding it impossible to entirely invest the place, General Sherman, after securing his line of communications across the Chattahoochee, moved his main force round by the enemy's left flank upon the Montgomery and Macon roads, to draw the enemy from his fortifications. In this he succeeded, and after defeating the enemy near Rough-and-Ready, Jonesboro', and Lovejoy's, forcing him to retreat to the south, on the 2d of September occupied Atlanta, the objective point of his campaign.

About the time of this move the rebel cavalry, under Wheeler, attempted to cut his communications in the rear, but was repulsed at Dalton, and driven into East Tennessee, whence it proceeded west to McMinnville, Murfreesboro', and Franklin, and was finally driven south of the Tennessee. The damage done by this raid was repaired in a few days.

During the partial investment of Atlanta General Rousseau joined General Sherman with a force of cavalry from Decatur, having made a successful raid upon the Atlanta and Montgomery railroad, and its branches near Opelika. Cavalry raids were also made by Generals McCook, Garrard, and Stoneman, to cut the remaining railroad communication with Atlanta. The first two were successful, the latter disastrous.

General Sherman's movement from Chattanooga to Atlanta was prompt, skilful, and brilliant. The history of his flank movements and battles during that memorable campaign will ever be read with an interest unsurpassed by anything in history.

His own report, and those of his subordinate commanders accompanying it, give the details of that most successful campaign.

He was dependent for the supply of his armies upon a single-track railroad from Nashville to the point where he was operating. This passed the entire distance through a hostile country, and every foot of it had to be protected by troops. The cavalry force of the enemy under Forrest, in northern Mississippi, was evidently waiting for Sherman to advance far enough into the mountains of Georgia to make a retreat disastrous, to get upon this line and destroy it beyond the possibility of further use. To guard against this danger, Sherman left what he supposed to be a sufficient force to operate against Forrest in West Tennessee. He directed General Washburn, who commanded there, to send Brigadier-General S. D. Sturgis in command of this force to attack him. On the morning of the 10th of June General Sturgis met the enemy near Guntown, Mississippi, was badly beaten, and driven back in utter rout and confusion to Memphis,—a distance of about one hundred miles,—hotly pursued by the enemy. By this, however, the enemy was defeated in his designs upon Sherman's line of communications. The persistency with which he followed up this success exhausted him, and made a season for rest and repairs necessary. In the mean time Major-General A. J. Smith, with the troops of the Army of the Tennessee that had been sent by General Sherman to General Banks, arrived at Memphis on their return from Red River, where they had done most excellent service. He was directed by General Sherman to immediately take the offensive against Forrest. This he did with the promptness and effect which has characterized his whole military career. On the 14th of July he met the enemy at Tupelo, Mississippi, and whipped him badly. The fighting continued through three days. Our loss was small compared with that of the enemy. Having accomplished the object of his expedition, General Smith returned to Memphis.

During the months of March and April this same force under Forrest annoyed us considerably. On the 24th of March it captured Union City, Kentucky, and its garrison, and on the 24th attacked Paducah, commanded by Colonel S. G. Hicks, Fortieth Illinois Volunteers. Colonel Hicks, having but a small force, withdrew to the forts near the river, from where he repulsed the enemy and drove him from the place.

On the 13th of April part of this force, under the rebel General Buford, summoned the garrison of Columbus, Kentucky, to surrender, but received for reply from Colonel Lawrence, Thirty-fourth New Jersey Volunteers, that, being placed there by his government with adequate force to hold his post and repel all enemies from it, surrender was out of the question.

On the morning of the same day Forrest attacked Fort Pillow, Tennessee, garrisoned by a detachment of Tennessee cavalry and the First Regiment Alabama colored troops, commanded by Major Booth. The garrison fought bravely until about three o'clock in the afternoon, when the enemy carried the works by assault, and, after our men threw down their arms, proceeded to an inhuman and merciless massacre of the garrison.

On the 14th, General Buford, having failed at Columbus, appeared before Paducah, but was again driven off.

Guerrillas and raiders, seemingly emboldened by Forrest's operations, were also very active in Kentucky. The most noted of these was Morgan. With a force of from two to three thousand cavalry he entered the State through Pound Gap in the latter part of May. On the 11th of June they attacked and captured Cynthiana, with its entire garrison. On the 12th he was overtaken by General Burbridge, and completely routed with heavy loss, and was finally driven out of the State. This notorious guerrilla was afterward surprised and killed near Greenville, Tennessee, and his command captured and dispersed by General Gillem.

In the absence of official reports of the commencement of the Red River expedition, except so far as relates to the movements of the troops sent by General Sherman under General A. J. Smith, I am unable to give the date of its starting. The troops under General Smith, comprising two divisions of the Sixteenth and a detachment of the Seventeenth Army-corps, left Vicksburg on the 10th of March, and reached the designated point on Red River one day earlier than that appointed by General Banks. The rebel forces at Fort de Russy, thinking to defeat him, left the fort on the 14th to give him battle in the open field; but, while occupying the enemy with skirmishing and demonstrations, Smith pushed forward to Fort de Russy, which had been left with a weak garrison, and captured it with its garrison—about three hundred and fifty men, eleven pieces of artillery, and many small arms. Our loss was but slight. On the 15th he pushed forward to Alexandria, which place he reached on the 18th. On the 21st he had an engagement with the enemy at Henderson's Hill, in which he defeated him, capturing two hundred and ten prisoners and four pieces of artillery.

On the 28th he again attacked and defeated the enemy under the rebel General Taylor, at Cane River. By the 26th General Banks had assembled his whole army at Alexandria, and pushed forward to Grand Ecore. On the morning of April 6th he moved from Grand Ecore. On the afternoon of the 7th he advanced and met the enemy near Pleasant Hill, and drove him from the field. On the same afternoon the enemy made a stand eight miles beyond Pleasant Hill, but was again compelled to retreat. On the 8th, at Sabine Cross Roads and Peach Hill, the enemy attacked and defeated his advance, capturing nineteen pieces of artillery and an immense amount of transportation and stores. During the night General Banks fell back to Pleasant Hill, where another battle was fought on the 9th, and the enemy repulsed with great loss. During the night General Banks continued his retrograde movement to Grand Ecore, and thence to Alexandria, which he reached on the 27th of April. Here a serious difficulty arose in getting Admiral Porter's fleet, which accompanied the expedition, over the rapids, the water having fallen so much since they passed up as to prevent their return. At the suggestion of Colonel (now Brigadier-General) Bailey, and under his superintendence, wing-dams were constructed, by which the channel was contracted so that the fleet passed down the rapids in safety.

The army evacuated Alexandria on the 14th of May, after considerable skirmishing with the enemy's advance, and reached Morganza and Point Coupéé near the end of the month. The disastrous termination of this expedition, and the lateness of the season, rendered impracticable the carrying out of my plans of a movement in force sufficient to ensure the capture of Mobile.

On the 23d of March Major-General Steele left Little Rock with the Seventh Army-corps, to cooperate with General Banks's expedition on the Red River, and reached Arkadelphia on the 28th. On the 16th of April, after driving the enemy before him, he was joined near Elkin's ferry, in Washita County, by General Thayer, who had marched from Fort Smith. After several severe skirmishes, in which the enemy was defeated, General Steele reached Camden, which he occupied about the middle of April.

On learning the defeat and consequent retreat of General Banks on Red River, and the loss of one of his own trains at Mark's Mill, in Dallas County, General Steele determined to fall back to the Arkansas River. He left Camden on the 26th of April, and reached Little Rock on the 2d of May. On the 30th of April the enemy attacked him while crossing Saline River at Jenkins's ferry, but was repulsed with considerable loss. Our loss was about six hundred killed, wounded, and prisoners.

Major-General Canby, who had been assigned to the command of the "Military Division of the West Mississippi," was therefore directed to send the Nineteenth Army-corps to join the armies operating against Richmond, and to limit the remainder of his command to such operations as might be necessary to hold the positions and lines of communications he then occupied.

Before starting General A. J. Smith's troops back to Sherman, General Canby sent a part of it to disperse a force of the enemy that was collecting near the Mississippi River. General Smith met and defeated this force near Lake Chicot on the 5th of June. Our loss was about forty killed and seventy wounded.

In the latter part of July General Canby sent Major-General Gordon Granger, with such forces as he could collect, to cooperate with Admiral Farragut against the defenses of Mobile Bay. On the 8th of August Fort Gaines surrendered to the combined naval and land forces. Fort Powell was blown up and abandoned.

On the 9th Fort Morgan was invested, and after a severe bombardment surrendered on the 23d. The total captures amounted to fourteen hundred and sixty-four prisoners and one hundred and four pieces of artillery.

About the last of August, it being reported that the rebel General Price, with a force of about ten thousand men, had reached Jacksonport, on his way to invade Missouri, General A. J. Smith's command, then en route from Memphis to join Sherman, was ordered to Missouri. A cavalry force was also, at the same time, sent from Memphis, under command of Colonel Winslow. This made General Rosecrans's forces superior to those of Price, and no doubt was entertained he would be able to check Price and drive him back, while the forces under General Steele, at Arkansas, would cut off his retreat. On the twenty-sixth day of September Price attacked Pilot Knob, and forced the garrison to retreat, and thence moved north to the Missouri River, and continued up that river toward Kansas. General Curtis, commanding Department of Kansas, immediately collected such forces as he could to repel the invasion of Kansas, while General Rosecrans's cavalry was operating in his rear.

The enemy was brought to battle on the Big Blue and defeated, with the loss of nearly all his artillery and trains and a large number of prisoners. He made a precipitate retreat to northern Arkansas. The impunity with which Price was enabled to roam over the State of Missouri for a long time, and the incalculable mischief done by him, shows to how little purpose a superior force may be used. There is no reason why General Rosecrans should not have concentrated his forces, and beaten and driven Price before the latter reached Pilot Knob.

September 20th the enemy's cavalry, under Forrest, crossed the Tennessee near Waterloo, Alabama, and on the 23d attacked the garrison at Athens, consisting of six hundred men, which capitulated on the 24th. Soon after the surrender two regiments of reinforcements arrived, and after a severe fight were compelled to surrender. Forrest destroyed the railroad westward, captured the garrison at Sulphur Branch trestle, skirmished with the garrison at Pulaski on the 27th, and on the same day cut the Nashville and Chattanooga railroad near Tullahoma and Decatur. On the morning of the 30th one column of Forrest's command, under Buford, appeared before Huntsville and summoned the surrender of the garrison. Receiving an answer in the negative, he remained in the vicinity of the place until next morning, when he again summoned its surrender, and received the same reply as on the night before. He withdrew in the direction of Athens, which place had been regarrisoned, and attacked it on the afternoon of the 1st of October, but without success. On the morning of the 2d he renewed his attack, but was handsomely repulsed.

Another column under Forrest appeared before Columbia on the morning of the 1st, but did not make an attack. On the morning of the 3d he moved toward Mount Pleasant. While these operations were going on, every exertion was made by General Thomas to destroy the forces under Forrest before he could recross the Tennessee, but was unable to prevent his escape to Corinth, Mississippi.

In September an expedition, under General Burbridge, was sent to destroy the salt-works at Saltville, Virginia. He met the enemy on the 2d of October, about three miles and a half from Saltville, and drove him into his strongly intrenched position around the salt-works, from which he was unable to dislodge him. During the night he withdrew his command and returned to Kentucky.

General Sherman, immediately after the fall of Atlanta, put his armies in camp in and about the place, and made all preparations for refitting and supplying them for future service. The great length of road from Atlanta to the Cumberland River, however, which had to be guarded, allowed the troops but little rest.

During this time Jefferson Davis made a speech in Macon, Georgia, which was reported in the papers of the South, and soon became known to the whole country, disclosing the plans of the enemy, thus enabling General Sherman to fully meet them. He exhibited the weakness of supposing that an army that had been beaten and fearfully decimated in a vain attempt at the defensive could successfully undertake the offensive against the army that had so often defeated it.

In execution of this plan, Hood, with his army, was soon reported to the southwest of Atlanta. Moving far to Sherman's right, he succeeded in reaching the railroad about Big Shanty, and moved north on it.

General Sherman, leaving a force to hold Atlanta, with the remainder of his army fell upon him and drove him to Gadsden, Alabama. Seeing the constant annoyance he would have with the roads to his rear if he attempted to hold Atlanta, General Sherman proposed the abandonment and destruction of that place, with all the railroads leading to it, and telegraphed me as follows:

APPENDIX

CENTREVILLE, GEORGIA,

October 10, noon.

Despatch about Wilson just received. Hood is now crossing Coosa River, twelve miles below Rome, bound west. If he passes over the Mobile and Ohio road, had I not better execute the plan of my letter sent by Colonel Porter, and leave General Thomas with the troops now in Tennessee, to defend the State? He will have an ample force when the reinforcements ordered reach Nashville.

W. T. SHERMAN,

Major-General.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GRANT.

For a full understanding of the plan referred to in this despatch, I quote from the letter sent by Colonel Porter: "I will therefore give my opinion: that your army and Canby's should be reinforced to the maximum; that after you get Wilmington, you strike for Savannah and the river; that Canby be instructed to hold the Mississippi River, and send a force to get Columbus, Georgia, either by the way of the Alabama or the Appalachiola, and that I keep Hood employed and put my army in final order for a march on Augusta, Columbia, and Charleston, to be ready as soon as Wilmington is sealed as to commerce, and the city of Savannah is in our possession." This was in reply to a letter of mine of date September 12th, in answer to a despatch of his containing substantially the same proposition, and in which I informed him of a proposed movement against Wilmington, and of the situation in Virginia, etc.

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA,

October 11, 1864, 11 A.M.

Your despatch of October 10th received. Does it not look as if Hood was going to attempt the invasion of Middle Tennessee, using the Mobile and Ohio and Memphis and Charleston roads to supply his base on the Tennessee River about Florence or Decatur? If he does this, he ought to be met and prevented from getting north of the Tennessee River. If you were to cut loose, I do not believe you would meet Hood's army, but would be bushwhacked by all the old men and little boys, and such railroad guards as are still left at home. Hood would probably strike for Nashville, thinking that by going north he could inflict greater damage upon us than we could upon the rebels by going south. If there is any way of getting at Hood's army, I would prefer that, but I must trust to your own judgment. I find I shall not be able to send a force from here to act with you on Savannah. Your movements, therefore, will be independent of mine—at least until the fall of Richmond takes place. I am afraid Thomas, with such lines of road as he has to protect, could not prevent Hood from going north. With Wilson turned loose with all your cavalry, you will find the rebels put much more on the defensive than heretofore.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Kingston, Georgia,
October 11, 11 a.m.

Hood moved his army from Palmetto Station across by Dallas and Cedartown, and is now on the Coosa River, south of Rome. He threw one corps on my road at Acworth, and I was forced to follow. I hold Atlanta with the Twentieth Corps, and have strong detachments along my line. This reduces my active force to a comparatively small army. We cannot remain here on the defensive. With the twenty-five thousand men and the bold cavalry he has, he can constantly break my roads. I would infinitely prefer to make a wreck of the road and of the country from Chattanooga to Atlanta, including the latter city; send back all my wounded and worthless, and with my effective army move through Georgia, smashing things, to the sea. Hood may turn into Tennessee and Kentucky, but I believe he will be forced to follow me. Instead of my being on the defensive, I would be on the offensive; instead of guessing at what he means to do, he would have to guess at my plans. The difference in war is full twenty-five per cent. I can make Savannah, Charleston, or the mouth of the Chattahoochee.

Answer quick, as I know we will not have the telegraph long.

W. T. Sherman,
Major-General.

City Point, Virginia,
October 11, 1864, 11:30 p.m.

Your despatch of to-day received. If you are satisfied the trip to the sea-coast can be made, holding the line of the Tennessee River firmly, you may make it, destroying all the railroad south of Dalton or Chattanooga, as you think best.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-General W. T. Sherman.

It was the original design to hold Atlanta, and by getting through to the coast, with a garrison left on the southern railroads, leading east and west, through Georgia, to effectually sever the East from the West; in other words, cut the would-be Confederacy in two again, as it had been cut once by our gaining possession of the Mississippi River. General Sherman's plan virtually effected this object.

General Sherman commenced at once his preparations for his proposed movement, keeping his army in position in the mean time to watch Hood. Becoming satisfied that Hood had moved westward from Gadsden across Sand Mountain, General Sherman sent the Fourth Corps, Major-General Stanley commanding, and the Twenty-third Corps, Major-General Schofield commanding, back to Chattanooga to report to Major-General Thomas, at Nashville, whom he had placed in command of all the troops of his military division, save the four army-corps and cavalry division he designed to move with through Georgia. With the troops thus left at his disposal there was little doubt that General Thomas could hold the line of the Tennessee, or, in the event Hood should force it, would be able to concentrate and beat him in battle. It was therefore readily consented to that Sherman should start for the sea-coast.

Having concentrated his troops at Atlanta by the 14th of November, he commenced his march, threatening both Augusta and Macon. His coming-out point could not be definitely fixed. Having to gather his subsistence as he marched through the country, it was not impossible that a force inferior to his own might compel him to head for such point as he could reach, instead of such as he might prefer. The blindness of the enemy, however, in ignoring his movement, and sending Hood's army—the only considerable force he had west of Richmond and east of the Mississippi River—northward on an offensive campaign, left the whole country open, and Sherman's route to his own choice.

How that campaign was conducted, how little opposition was met with, the condition of the country through which the armies passed, the capture of Fort McAllister on the Savannah River, and the occupation of Savannah on the 21st of December, are all clearly set forth in General Sherman's admirable report.

Soon after General Sherman commenced his march from Atlanta, two expeditions—one from Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and one from Vicksburg, Mississippi—were started by General Canby to cut the enemy's lines of communication with Mobile and detain troops in that field. General Foster, commanding Department of the South, also sent an expedition, via Broad River, to destroy the railroad between Charleston and Savannah. The expedition from Vicksburg, under command of Brevet Brigadier-General E. D. Osband (colonel Third United States Colored Cavalry), captured on the 27th of November, and destroyed, the Mississippi Central railroad bridge and trestle-work over Big Black River, near Canton, thirty miles of the road, and two locomotives, besides large amounts of stores. The expedition from Baton Rouge was without favorable results. The expedition from the Department of the South, under the immediate command of Brigadier-General John P. Hatch, consisting of about five thousand men of all arms, including a brigade from the navy, proceeded up Broad River and debarked at Boyd's Neck on the 29th of November, from where it moved to strike the railroad at Grahamsville. At Honey Hill, about three miles from Grahamsville, the enemy was found and attacked in a strongly fortified position, which resulted, after severe fighting, in our repulse with a loss of seven hundred and forty-six in killed, wounded, and missing. During the night General Hatch withdrew. On the 6th of December General Foster obtained a position covering the Charleston and Savannah railroad between the Coosawhatchie and Tulifiny rivers.

Hood, instead of following Sherman, continued his move northward, which seemed to me to be leading to his certain doom. At all events, had I had the power to command both armies, I should not have changed the orders under which he seemed to be acting. On the 26th of October the advance of Hood's army attacked the garrison at Decatur, Alabama, but, failing to carry the place, withdrew toward Courtland, and succeeded, in the face of our cavalry, in effecting a lodgment on the north side of the Tennessee River, near Florence. On the 28th Forrest reached the Tennessee at Fort Heiman, and captured a gunboat and three transports. On the 2d of November he planted batteries above and below Johnsonville, on the opposite side of the river, isolating three gunboats and eight transports. On the 4th the enemy opened his batteries upon the place, and was replied to from the gunboats and the garrison. The gunboats, becoming disabled, were set on fire, as also were the transports, to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy. About a million and a half dollars' worth of stores and property on the levee and in storehouses was consumed by fire. On the 5th the enemy disappeared and crossed to the north side of the Tennessee River, above Johnsonville, moving toward Clifton, and subsequently joined Hood. On the night of the 5th General Schofield, with the advance of the Twenty-third Corps, reached Johnsonville; but, finding the enemy gone, was ordered to Pulaski, and put in command of all the troops there, with instructions to watch the movements of Hood and retard his advance, but not to risk a general engagement until the arrival of General A. J. Smith's command from Missouri, and until General Wilson could get his cavalry remounted.

On the 19th General Hood continued his advance. General Thomas, retarding him as much as possible, fell back toward Nashville for the purpose of concentrating his command and gaining time for the arrival of reinforcements. The enemy, coming up with our main force, commanded by General Schofield, at Franklin, on the 30th, assaulted our works repeatedly during the afternoon until late at night, but was in every instance repulsed. His loss in this battle was one thousand seven hundred and fifty killed, seven hundred and two prisoners, and three thousand eight hundred wounded. Among his losses were six general officers killed, six wounded, and one captured. Our entire loss was two thousand three hundred. This was the first serious opposition the enemy met with, and, I am satisfied, was the fatal blow to all his expectations. During the night General Schofield fell back toward Nashville. This left the field to the enemy,—not lost by battle, but voluntarily abandoned,—so that General Thomas's whole force might be brought together. The enemy followed up and commenced the establishment of his line in front of Nashville on the 2d of December.

As soon as it was ascertained that Hood was crossing the Tennessee River, and that Price was going out of Missouri, General Rosecrans was ordered to send to General Thomas the troops of General A. J. Smith's command, and such other troops as he could spare. The advance of this reinforcement reached Nashville on the 30th of November.

On the morning of the 15th December General Thomas attacked Hood in position, and, in a battle lasting two days, defeated and drove him from the field in the utmost confusion, leaving in our hands most of his artillery and many thousand prisoners, including four general officers.

Before the battle of Nashville I grew very impatient over, as it appeared to me, the unnecessary delay. This impatience was increased upon learning that the enemy had sent a force of cavalry across the Cumberland into Kentucky. I feared Hood would cross his whole army and give us great trouble there. After urging upon General Thomas the necessity of immediately assuming the offensive, I started West to superintend matters there in person. Reaching Washington city, I received General Thomas's despatch announcing his attack upon the enemy, and the result as far as the battle had progressed. I was delighted. All fears and apprehensions were dispelled. I am not yet satisfied but that General Thomas, immediately upon the appearance of Hood before Nashville, and before he had time to fortify, should have moved out with his whole force and given him battle, instead of waiting to remount his cavalry, which delayed him until the inclemency of the weather made it impracticable to attack earlier than he did. But his final defeat of Hood was so complete that it will be accepted as a vindication of that distinguished officer's judgment.

After Hood's defeat at Nashville he retreated, closely pursued by cavalry and infantry, to the Tennessee River, being forced to abandon many pieces of artillery and most of his transportation. On the 28th of December our advanced forces ascertained that he had made good his escape to the south side of the river.

About this time, the rains having set in heavily in Tennessee and North Alabama, making it difficult to move army transportation and... artillery, General Thomas stopped the pursuit by his main force at the Tennessee River. A small force of cavalry, under Colonel W. J. Palmer, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, continued to follow Hood for some distance, capturing considerable transportation and the enemy’s pontoon-bridge. The details of these operations will be found clearly set forth in General Thomas’s report.

A cavalry expedition, under Brevet Major-General Grierson, started from Memphis on the 21st of December. On the 25th he surprised and captured Forrest’s dismounted camp at Verona, Mississippi, on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, destroyed the railroad, sixteen cars loaded with wagons and pontoons for Hood’s army, four thousand new English carbines, and large amounts of public stores. On the morning of the 28th he attacked and captured a force of the enemy at Egypt, and destroyed a train of fourteen cars. Thence turning to the southwest, he struck the Mississippi Central railroad at Winona, destroyed the factories and large amounts of stores at Bankston, and the machine-shops and public property at Grenada, arriving at Vicksburg January 5th.

During these operations in Middle Tennessee, the enemy, with a force under General Breckinridge, entered East Tennessee. On the 13th of November he attacked General Gillem, near Morristown, capturing his artillery and several hundred prisoners. Gillem, with what was left of his command, retreated to Knoxville. Following up his success, Breckinridge moved to near Knoxville, but withdrew on the 18th, followed by General Ammen. Under the directions of General Thomas, General Stoneman concentrated the commands of Generals Burbridge and Gillem near Bean’s Station, to operate against Breckinridge and destroy or drive him into Virginia; destroy the salt-works at Saltville, and the railroad into Virginia as far as he could go without endangering his command. On the 12th of December he commenced his movement, capturing and dispersing the enemy’s forces wherever he met them. On the 16th he struck the enemy, under Vaughn, at Marion, completely routing and pursuing him to Wytheville, capturing all his artillery, trains, and one hundred and ninety-eight prisoners; and destroyed Wytheville, with its stores and supplies, and the extensive lead-works near there. Returning to Marion, he met a force under Breckinridge, consisting, among other troops, of the garrison of Saltville, that had started in pursuit. He at once made arrangements to attack it the next morning; but morning found Breckinridge gone. He then moved directly to Saltville, and destroyed the extensive salt-works at that place, a large amount of stores, and captured eight pieces of artillery. Having thus successfully executed his instructions, he returned General Burbridge to Lexington and General Gillem to Knoxville.

Wilmington, North Carolina, was the most important sea-coast port left to the enemy through which to get supplies from abroad and send cotton and other products out by blockade-runners, besides being a place of great strategic value. The navy had been making strenuous exertions to seal the harbor of Wilmington, but with only partial effect. The nature of the outlet of Cape Fear River was such that it required watching for so great a distance that, without possession of the land north of New Inlet, or Fort Fisher, it was impossible for the navy to entirely close the harbor against the entrance of blockade-runners.

To secure the possession of this land required the coöperation of a land force, which I agreed to furnish. Immediately commenced the assemblage in Hampton Roads, under Admiral D. D. Porter, of the most formidable armada ever collected for concentration upon one given point. This necessarily attracted the attention of the enemy, as well as that of the loyal North; and through the imprudence of the public press, and very likely of officers of both branches of service, the exact object of the expedition became a subject of common discussion in the newspapers both North and South. The enemy, thus warned, prepared to meet it. This caused a postponement of the expedition until the latter part of November, when, being again called upon by Hon. G. V. Fox, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, I agreed to furnish the men required at once, and went myself, in company with Major-General Butler, to Hampton Roads, where we had a conference with Admiral Porter as to the force required and the time of starting. A force of six thousand five hundred men was regarded as sufficient. The time of starting was not definitely arranged, but it was thought all would be ready by the 6th of December, if not before. Learning, on the 30th of November, that Bragg had gone to Georgia, taking with him most of the forces about Wilmington, I deemed it of the utmost importance that the expedition should reach its destination before the return of Bragg, and directed General Butler to make all arrangements for the departure of Major-General Weitzel, who had been designated to command the land forces, so that the navy might not be detained one moment.

On the 6th of December the following instructions were given:

City Point, Virginia,
December 6, 1864.

General: The first object of the expedition under General Weitzel is to close to the enemy the port of Wilmington. If successful in this, the second will be to capture Wilmington itself. There are reasonable grounds to hope for success, if advantage can be taken of the absence of the greater part of the enemy's forces, now looking after Sherman in Georgia. The directions you have given for the numbers and equipment of the expedition are all right, except in the unimportant matter of where they embark and the amount of intrenching-tools to be taken. The object of the expedition will be gained by effecting a landing on the mainland between Cape Fear River and the Atlantic, north of the north entrance to the river.
Should such landing be effected while the enemy still holds Fort Fisher and the batteries guarding the entrance to the river, then the troops should intrench themselves, and, by cooperating with the navy, effect the reduction and capture of those places. These in our hands, the navy could enter the harbor, and the port of Wilmington would be sealed. Should Fort Fisher and the point of land on which it is built fall into the hands of our troops immediately on landing, then it will be worth the attempt to capture Wilmington by a forced march and surprise. If time is consumed in gaining the first object of the expedition, the second will become a matter of after-consideration.

The details for execution are intrusted to you and the officer immediately in command of the troops.

Should the troops under General Weitzel fail to effect a landing at or near Fort Fisher, they will be returned to the armies operating against Richmond without delay.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-General B. F. Butler.

General Butler commanding the army from which the troops were taken for this enterprise, and the territory within which they were to operate, military courtesy required that all orders and instructions should go through him. They were so sent; but General Weitzel has since officially informed me that he never received the foregoing instructions, nor was he aware of their existence until he read General Butler's published official report of the Fort Fisher failure, with my indorsement and papers accompanying it. I had no idea of General Butler's accompanying the expedition until the evening before it got off from Bermuda Hundred, and then did not dream but that General Weitzel had received all the instructions and would be in command. I rather formed the idea that General Butler was actuated by a desire to witness the effect of the explosion of the powder-boat. The expedition was detained several days at Hampton Roads, awaiting the loading of the powder-boat.

The importance of getting the Wilmington expedition off without any delay, with or without the powder-boat, had been urged upon General Butler, and he advised to so notify Admiral Porter.

The expedition finally got off on the 13th of December, and arrived at the place of rendezvous, off New Inlet, near Fort Fisher, on the evening of the 15th. Admiral Porter arrived on the evening of the 18th, having put in at Beaufort to get ammunition for the monitors. The sea becoming rough, making it difficult to land troops, and the supply of water and coal being about exhausted, the transport fleet put back to Beaufort to replenish; this, with the state of the weather, delayed the return to the place of rendezvous until the 24th. The powder-boat was exploded on the morning of the 24th, before the return of General Butler from Beaufort; but it would seem, from the notice taken of it in the Southern newspapers, that the enemy were never enlightened as to the object of the explosion until they were informed by the Northern press.

On the 25th a landing was effected without opposition, and a reconnoissance, under Brevet Brigadier-General Curtis, pushed up toward the fort. But before receiving a full report of the result of this reconnoissance, General Butler, in direct violation of the instructions given, ordered the reëmbarkation of the troops and the return of the expedition. The reëmbarkation was accomplished by the morning of the 27th.

On the return of the expedition, officers and men—among them Brevet Major-General (then Brevet Brigadier-General) N. M. Curtis, First Lieutenant G. W. Ross, One Hundred and Seventeenth Regiment New York Volunteers, First Lieutenant William H. Walling and Second Lieutenant George Simpson, One Hundred and Forty-second New York Volunteers—voluntarily reported to me that when recalled they were nearly into the fort, and, in their opinion, it could have been taken without much loss.

Soon after the return of the expedition I received a despatch from the Secretary of the Navy, and a letter from Admiral Porter, informing me that the fleet was still off Fort Fisher, and expressing the conviction that, under a proper leader, the place could be taken. The natural supposition with me was that when the troops abandoned the expedition the navy would do so also. Finding it had not, however, I answered on the 30th of December, advising Admiral Porter to hold on, and that I would send a force and make another attempt to take the place. This time I selected Brevet Major-General (now Major-General) A. H. Terry to command the expedition. The troops composing it consisted of the same that composed the former, with the addition of a small brigade, numbering about fifteen hundred, and a small siege-train. The latter it was never found necessary to land. I communicated direct to the commander of the expedition the following instructions:

City Point, Virginia,
January 3, 1865.

General: The expedition intrusted to your command has been fitted out to renew the attempt to capture Fort Fisher, North Carolina, and Wilmington ultimately, if the fort falls. You will then proceed with as little delay as possible to the naval fleet lying off Cape Fear River, and report the arrival of yourself and command to Admiral D. D. Porter, commanding North Atlantic Blockading Squadron.

It is exceedingly desirable that the most complete understanding should exist between yourself and the naval commander. I suggest, therefore, that you consult with Admiral Porter freely, and get from him the part to be performed by each branch of the public service, so that there may be unity of action. It would be well to have the whole programme laid down in writing. I have served with Admiral Porter, and know that you can rely on his judgment and his nerve to undertake what he proposes. I would therefore defer to him as much as is consistent with your own responsibilities. The first object to be attained is to get a firm position on the spit of land on which Fort Fisher is built, from which you can operate against that fort. You want to look to the practicability of receiving your supplies, and to defending yourself against superior forces sent against you by any of the avenues left open to the enemy. If such a position can be obtained, the siege of Fort Fisher will not be abandoned until its reduction is accomplished, or another plan of campaign is ordered from these headquarters.

My own views are that, if you effect a landing, the navy ought to run a portion of their fleet into Cape Fear River, while the balance of it operates on the outside. Land forces cannot invest Fort Fisher, or cut it off from supplies or reinforcements, while the river is in possession of the enemy.

A siege-train will be loaded on vessels and sent to Fort Monroe, in readiness to be sent to you if required. All other supplies can be drawn from Beaufort as you need them.

Keep the fleet of vessels with you until your position is assured. When you find they can be spared, order them back, or such of them as you can spare, to Fort Monroe, to report for orders.

In case of failure to effect a landing, bring your command back to Beaufort, and report to these headquarters for further instructions. You will not disembark at Beaufort until so directed.

General Sheridan has been ordered to send a division of troops to Baltimore and place them on sea-going vessels. These troops will be brought to Fort Monroe and kept there on the vessels until you are heard from.
Should you require them, they will be sent to you.

U. S. GRANT,
Brevet Major-General A. H. Terry.

Lieutenant-Colonel C. B. Comstock, aide-de-camp (now brevet brigadier-general), who accompanied the former expedition, was assigned, in orders, as chief engineer to this.

It will be seen that these instructions did not differ materially from those given for the first expedition, and that in neither instance was there an order to assault Fort Fisher. This was a matter left entirely to the discretion of the commanding officer.

The expedition sailed from Fort Monroe on the morning of the 6th, arriving at the rendezvous off Beaufort on the 8th, where, owing to the difficulties of the weather, it lay until the morning of the 12th, when it got under way and reached its destination that evening.
Under cover of the fleet, the disembarkation of the troops com-enced on the morning of the 13th, and by 3 p.m. was completed without loss. On the 14th a reconnaissance was pushed to within five hundred yards of Fort Fisher, and a small advance-work taken possession of and turned into a defensive line against any attempt that might be made from the fort. This reconnaissance disclosed the fact that the front of the work had been seriously injured by the navy fire. In the afternoon of the 15th the fort was assaulted, and after most desperate fighting was captured, with its entire garrison and armament. Thus was secured, by the combined efforts of the navy and army, one of the most important successes of the war. Our loss was: killed, one hundred and ten; wounded, five hundred and thirty-six. On the 16th and 17th the enemy abandoned and blew up Fort Caswell and the works on Smith’s Island, which were immediately occupied by us. This gave us entire control of the mouth of the Cape Fear River.

At my request, Major-General B. F. Butler was relieved, and Major-General E. O. C. Ord assigned to the Department of Virginia and North Carolina.

The defense of the line of the Tennessee no longer requiring the force which had beaten and nearly destroyed the only army now threatening it, I determined to find other fields of operation for General Thomas’s surplus troops—fields from which they would cooperate with other movements. General Thomas was therefore directed to collect all troops not essential to hold his communications at Eastport in readiness for orders. On the 7th of January General Thomas was directed, if he was assured of the departure of Hood south from Corinth, to send General Schofield with his corps east with as little delay as possible. This direction was promptly complied with, and the advance of the corps reached Washington on the 23d of the same month, whence it was sent to Fort Fisher and New Berne. On the 26th he was directed to send General A. J. Smith’s command and a division of cavalry to report to General Canby. By the 7th of February the whole force was en route for its destination.

The State of North Carolina was constituted into a military department, and General Schofield assigned to command, and placed under the orders of Major-General Sherman. The following instructions were given him:

City Point, Virginia,
January 31, 1865.

General: . . . Your movements are intended as coöperative with Sherman’s through the States of South and North Carolina. The first point to be attained is to secure Wilmington. Goldsboro’ will then be your objective point, moving either from Wilmington or New Berne, or both, as you deem best. Should you not be able to reach Goldsboro’, you will advance on the line or lines of railway connecting that place with the sea-coast—as near to it as you can, building the road behind you. The enterprise under you has two objects: the first is to give General Sherman material aid, if needed, in his march north; the second, to open a base of supplies for him on his line of march. As soon, therefore, as you can determine which of the two points, Wilmington or New Berne, you can best use for throwing supplies from to the interior, you will commence the accumulation of twenty days’ rations and forage for sixty thousand men and twenty thousand animals. You will get of these as many as you can house and protect to such point in the interior as you may be able to occupy. I believe General Palmer has received some instructions direct from General Sherman on the subject of securing supplies for his army. You will learn what steps he has taken, and be governed in your requisitions accordingly. A supply of ordnance stores will also be necessary.

Make all requisitions upon the chiefs of their respective departments in the field with me at City Point. Communicate with me by every opportunity, and should you deem it necessary at any time, send a special boat to Fortress Monroe, from which point you can communicate by telegraph.

The supplies referred to in these instructions are exclusive of those required for your own command.

The movements of the enemy may justify, or even make it your imperative duty, to cut loose from your base, and strike for the interior to aid Sherman. In such case you will act on your own judgment without waiting for instructions. You will report, however, what you purpose doing. The details for carrying out these instructions are necessarily left to you. I would urge, however, if I did not know that you are already fully alive to the importance of it, prompt action. Sherman may be looked for in the neighborhood of Goldsboro' any time from the 22d to the 28th of February; this limits your time very materially.

If rolling-stock is not secured in the capture of Wilmington, it can be supplied from Washington. A large force of railroad men have already been sent to Beaufort, and other mechanics will go to Fort Fisher in a day or two. On this point I have informed you by telegraph.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-General J. M. Schofield.

Previous to giving these instructions I had visited Fort Fisher, accompanied by General Schofield, for the purpose of seeing for myself the condition of things, and personally conferring with General Terry and Admiral Porter as to what was best to be done.

Anticipating the arrival of General Sherman at Savannah,—his army entirely foot-loose, Hood being then before Nashville, Tennessee, the Southern railroads destroyed, so that it would take several months to re-establish a through line from west to east, and regarding the capture of Lee's army as the most important operation toward closing the rebellion,—I sent orders to General Sherman, on the 6th of December, that after establishing a base on the sea-coast, with necessary garrison, to include all his artillery and cavalry, to come by water to City Point with the balance of his command.

On the 18th of December, having received information of the defeat and utter rout of Hood's army by General Thomas, and that, owing to the great difficulty of procuring ocean transportation, it would take over two months to transport Sherman's army, and doubting whether he might not contribute as much toward the desired result by operating from where he was, I wrote to him to that effect, and asked him for his views as to what would be best to do. A few days after this I received a communication from General Sherman, of date 16th December, acknowledging the receipt of my order of the 6th, and informing me of his preparations to carry it into effect as soon as he could get transportation. Also that he had expected, upon reducing Savannah, instantly to march to Columbia, South Carolina, thence to Raleigh, and thence to report to me; but that this would consume about six weeks' time after the fall of Savannah, whereas by sea he could probably reach me by the middle of January. The confidence he manifested in this letter of being able to march up and join me pleased me, and without waiting for a reply to my letter of the 18th, I directed him, on the 28th of December, to make preparations to start, as he proposed, without delay, to break up the railroads in North and South Carolina, and join the armies operating against Richmond as soon as he could.

On the 21st of January I informed General Sherman that I had ordered the Twenty-third Corps, Major-General Schofield commanding, east; that it numbered about twenty-one thousand men; that we had at Fort Fisher about eight thousand men; at New Berne about four thousand; that if Wilmington was captured General Schofield would go there; if not, he would be sent to New Berne; that in either event all the surplus force at both points would move to the interior toward Goldsboro', in coöperation with his movement; that from either point railroad communication could be run out; and that all these troops would be subject to his orders as he came into communication with them.

In obedience to his instructions, General Schofield proceeded to reduce Wilmington, North Carolina, in coöperation with the navy under Admiral Porter, moving his forces up both sides of the Cape Fear River. Fort Anderson, the enemy's main defense on the west bank of the river, was occupied on the morning of the 19th, the enemy having evacuated it after our appearance before it.

After fighting on 20th and 21st, our troops entered Wilmington on the morning of the 22d, the enemy having retreated toward Goldsboro' during the night. Preparations were at once made for a movement on Goldsboro' in two columns,—one from Wilmington, and the other from New Berne,—and to repair the railroad leading there from each place, as well as to supply General Sherman by Cape Fear River, toward Fayetteville, if it became necessary. The column from New Berne was attacked on the 8th of March, at Wise's Forks, and driven back with the loss of several hundred prisoners. On the 11th the enemy renewed his attack upon our intrenched position, but was repulsed with severe loss, and fell back during the night. On the 14th the Neuse River was crossed and Kinston occupied, and on the 21st Goldsboro' was entered. The column from Wilmington reached Cox's Bridge, on the Neuse River, ten miles above Goldsboro', on the 22d.

By the 1st of February General Sherman's whole army was in motion from Savannah. He captured Columbia, South Carolina, on the 17th; thence moved on Goldsboro', North Carolina, via Fayetteville, reaching the latter place on the 12th of March, opening up communication with General Schofield by way of Cape Fear River. On the 15th he resumed his march on Goldsboro'. He met a force of the enemy at Averysboro', and after a severe fight defeated and compelled it to retreat. Our loss in this engagement was about six hundred. The enemy's loss was much greater. On the 18th the combined forces of the enemy, under Joe Johnston, attacked his advance at Bentonville, capturing three guns and driving it back upon the main body. General Slocum, who was in the advance, ascertaining that the whole of Johnston's army was in the front, arranged his troops on the defensive, intrenched himself, and awaited reinforcements, which were pushed forward. On the night of the 21st the enemy retreated to Smithfield, leaving his dead and wounded in our hands. From there Sherman continued to Goldsboro', which place had been occupied by General Schofield on the 21st (crossing the Neuse River ten miles above there, at Cox's Bridge, where General Terry had got possession and thrown a pontoon-bridge on the 22d), thus forming a junction with the columns from New Berne and Wilmington.

Among the important fruits of this campaign was the fall of Charleston, South Carolina. It was evacuated by the enemy on the night of the 17th of February, and occupied by our forces on the 18th.

On the morning of the 31st of January General Thomas was directed to send a cavalry expedition, under General Stoneman, from East Tennessee, to penetrate South Carolina well down toward Columbia, to destroy the railroads and military resources of the country, and return, if he was able, to East Tennessee by way of Salisbury, North Carolina, releasing our prisoners there, if possible. Of the feasibility of this latter, however, General Stoneman was to judge. Sherman’s movements, I had no doubt, would attract the attention of all the force the enemy could collect, and facilitate the execution of this. General Stoneman was so late in making his start on this expedition (and Sherman having passed out of the State of South Carolina), on the 27th of February I directed General Thomas to change his course and ordered him to repeat his raid of last fall, destroying the railroad toward Lynchburg as far as he could. This would keep him between our garrisons in East Tennessee and the enemy. I regarded it not impossible that in the event of the enemy being driven from Richmond he might fall back to Lynchburg and attempt a raid north through East Tennessee. On the 14th of February the following communication was sent to General Thomas:

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA,
February 14, 1865.

General Canby is preparing a movement from Mobile Bay against Mobile and the interior of Alabama. His force will consist of about twenty thou-Grant, cavalry, determined. The cavalry you have sent to Canby will be debarked at Vicksburg. It, with the available cavalry already in that section, will move from there eastward, in cooperation. Hood's army has been terribly reduced by the severe punishment you gave it in Tennessee, by desertion consequent upon their defeat, and now by the withdrawal of many of them to oppose Sherman. (I take it a large portion of the infantry has been so withdrawn. It is so asserted in the Richmond papers, and a member of the rebel Congress said a few days since, in a speech, that one half of it had been brought to South Carolina to oppose Sherman.) This being true, or even if it is not true, Canby's movement will attract all the attention of the enemy, and leave the advance from your standpoint easy. I think it advisable, therefore, that you prepare as much of a cavalry force as you can spare, and hold it in readiness to go south. The object would be threefold: first, to attract as much of the enemy's force as possible, to insure success to Canby; second, to destroy the enemy's line of communications and military resources; third, to destroy or capture their forces brought into the field. Tuscaloosa and Selma would probably be the points to direct the expedition against. This, however, would not be so important as the mere fact of penetrating deep into Alabama. Discretion should be left to the officer commanding the expedition to go where, according to the information he may receive, he will best secure the objects named above.

Now that your force has been so much depleted, I do not know what number of men you can put into the field. If not more than five thousand men, however, all cavalry, I think it will be sufficient. It is not desirable that you should start this expedition until the one leaving Vicksburg has been three or four days out, or even a week. I do not know when it will start, but will inform you by telegraph as soon as I learn. If you should hear through other sources before hearing from me, you can act on the information received.

To insure success your cavalry should go with as little wagon-train as possible, relying upon the country for supplies. I would also reduce the number of guns to a battery, or the number of batteries, and put the extra teams to the guns taken. No guns or caissons should be taken with less than eight horses.

Please inform me by telegraph, on receipt of this, what force you think you will be able to send under these directions.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-General G. H. Thomas.

On the 15th he was directed to start the expedition as soon after the 20th as he could get it off.

I deemed it of the utmost importance, before a general movement of the armies operating against Richmond, that all communications with the city north of James River should be cut off. The enemy having withdrawn the bulk of his force from the Shenandoah Valley and sent it south, or replaced troops sent from Richmond, and desiring to reinforce Sherman, if practicable, whose cavalry was greatly inferior in numbers to that of the enemy, I determined to make a move from the Shenandoah, which, if successful, would accomplish the first at least, and possibly the latter of these objects. I therefore telegraphed General Sheridan as follows:

City Point, Virginia,
February 20, 1865, 1 P.M.

General: As soon as it is possible to travel, I think you will have no difficulty about reaching Lynchburg with a cavalry force alone. From there you could destroy the railroad and canal in every direction, so as to be of no further use to the rebellion. Sufficient cavalry should be left behind to look after Mosby's gang. From Lynchburg, if information you might get there would justify it, you will strike south, heading the streams in Virginia to the westward of Danville, and push on and join General Sherman. This additional raid, with one now about starting from East Tennessee under Stoneman, numbering four or five thousand cavalry, one from Vicksburg, numbering seven or eight thousand cavalry, one from Eastport, Mississippi, ten thousand cavalry, Canby from Mobile Bay, with about thirty-eight thousand mixed troops, these three latter pushing for Tuscaloosa, Selma, and Montgomery, and Sherman with a large army eating out the vitals of South Carolina, is all that will be wanted to leave nothing for the rebellion to stand upon. I would advise you to overcome great obstacles to accomplish this. Charleston was evacuated on Tuesday last.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-General P. H. Sheridan.

On the 25th I received a despatch from General Sheridan, inquiring where Sherman was aiming for, and if I could give him definite information as to the points he might be expected to move on, this side of Charlotte, North Carolina. In answer the following telegram was sent him:

City Point, Virginia,
February 25, 1865.

General: Sherman's movements will depend on the amount of opposition he meets with from the enemy. If strongly opposed, he may possibly have to fall back to Georgetown, South Carolina, and fit out for a new start. I think, however, all danger for the necessity of going to that point has passed. I believe he has passed Charlotte. He may take Fayetteville on his way to Goldsboro'. If you reach Lynchburg, you will have to be guided in your after-movements by the information you obtain. Before you could possibly reach Sherman, I think you would find him moving from Goldsboro' toward Raleigh, or engaging the enemy strongly posted at one or the other of these places, with railroad communications opened from his army to Wilmington or New Berne.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-General P. H. Sheridan.

General Sheridan moved from Winchester on the 27th of February with two divisions of cavalry, numbering about five thousand each.
On the 1st of March he secured the bridge, which the enemy attempted to destroy, across the middle fork of the Shenandoah, at Mount Crawford, and entered Staunton on the 2d, the enemy having retreated on Waynesboro'. Thence he pushed on to Waynesboro', where he found the enemy in force in an intrenched position, under General Early. Without stopping to make a reconnaissance, an immediate attack was made, the position was carried, and sixteen hundred prisoners, eleven pieces of artillery, with horses and caissons complete, two hundred wagons and teams loaded with subsistence, and seventeen battle-flags were captured. The prisoners, under an escort of fifteen hundred men, were sent back to Winchester. Thence he marched on Charlottesville, destroying effectually the railroad and bridges as he went, which place he reached on the 3d. Here he remained two days, destroying the railroad toward Richmond and Lynchburg, including the large iron bridges over the north and south forks of the Rivanna River, and awaited the arrival of his trains. This necessary delay caused him to abandon the idea of capturing Lynchburg. On the morning of the 6th, dividing his force into two columns, he sent one to Scottsville, whence it marched up the James River Canal to New Market, destroying every lock, and in many places the bank of the canal. From here a force was pushed out from this column to Duguidsville, to obtain possession of the bridge across the James River at that place, but failed. The enemy burned it on our approach. The enemy also burned the bridge across the river at Hardwicksville. The other column moved down the railroad toward Lynchburg, destroying it as far as Amherst Court House, sixteen miles from Lynchburg; thence across the country, uniting with the column at New Market. The river being very high, his pontoons would not reach across it; and the enemy having destroyed the bridges by which he had hoped to cross the river and get on the South Side railroad about Farmville, and destroy it to Appomattox Court House, the only thing left for him was to return to Winchester or strike a base at the White House. Fortunately, he chose the latter. From New Market he took up his line of march, following the canal toward Richmond, destroying every lock upon it and cutting the banks wherever practicable, to a point eight miles east of Goochland, concentrating the whole force at Columbia on the 10th. Here he rested one day, and sent through by scouts information of his whereabouts and purposes, and a request for supplies to meet him at White House, which reached me on the night of the 12th. An infantry force was immediately sent to get possession of White House, and supplies were forwarded. Moving from Columbia in a direction to threaten Richmond, to near Ashland Station, he crossed the Annas, and after having destroyed all the bridges and many miles of the railroad, proceeded down the north bank of the Pamunkey to White House, which place he reached on the 19th.
Previous to this the following communication was sent to General Thomas:

City Point, Virginia,
March 7, 1865, 9:30 a.m.

GENERAL: I think it will be advisable now for you to repair the railroad in East Tennessee and throw a good force up to Bull's Gap and fortify there. Supplies at Knoxville could always be got forward as required. With Bull's Gap fortified, you can occupy as outposts about all of East Tennessee, and be prepared, if it should be required of you in the spring, to make a campaign toward Lynchburg or into North Carolina. I do not think Stoneman should break the road until he gets into Virginia, unless it should be to cut off rolling-stock that may be caught west of that.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-General G. H. Thomas.

Thus it will be seen that in March, 1865, General Canby was moving an adequate force against Mobile and the army defending it under General Dick Taylor; Thomas was pushing out two large and well-appointed cavalry expeditions—one from Middle Tennessee, under Brevet Major-General Wilson, against the enemy's vital points in Alabama, the other from East Tennessee, under Major-General Stoneman, toward Lynchburg—and assembling the remainder of his available forces, preparatory to commence offensive operations from East Tennessee; General Sheridan's cavalry was at White House; the Armies of the Potomac and James were confronting the enemy, under Lee, in his defenses of Richmond and Petersburg; General Sherman with his armies, reinforced by that of General Schofield, was at Goldsboro'; General Pope was making preparations for a spring campaign against the enemy under Kirby Smith and Price, west of the Mississippi; and General Hance was concentrating a force in the vicinity of Winchester, Virginia, to guard against invasion or to operate offensively, as might prove necessary.

After the long march by General Sheridan's cavalry over winter roads, it was necessary to rest and refit at White House. At this time the greatest source of uneasiness to me was the fear that the enemy would leave his strong lines about Petersburg and Richmond for the purpose of uniting with Johnston, before he was driven from them by battle, or I was prepared to make an effectual pursuit. On the 24th of March General Sheridan moved from White House, crossed the James River at Jones's Landing, and formed a junction with the Army of the Potomac in front of Petersburg on the 27th. During this move General Ord sent forces to cover the crossings of the Chickahominy.

On the 24th of March the following instructions for a general movement of the armies operating against Richmond were issued:
GENERAL: On the 29th instant the armies operating against Richmond will be moved by our left, for the double purpose of turning the enemy out of his present position around Petersburg, and to insure the success of the cavalry under General Sheridan, which will start at the same time, in its efforts to reach and destroy the South Side and Danville railroads. Two corps of the Army of the Potomac will be moved at first in two columns, taking the two roads crossing Hatcher's Run, nearest where the present line held by us strikes that stream, both moving toward Dinwiddie Court House.

The cavalry under General Sheridan, joined by the division now under General Davies, will move at the same time by the Weldon road and the Jerusalem plank road, turning west from the latter before crossing the Nottoway, and west with the whole column before reaching Stony Creek. General Sheridan will then move independently, under other instructions which will be given him. All dismounted cavalry belonging to the Army of the Potomac, and the dismounted cavalry from the Middle Military Division not required for guarding property belonging to their arm of service, will report to Brigadier-General Benham, to be added to the defenses of City Point. Major-General Parke will be left in command of all the army left for holding the lines about Petersburg and City Point, subject, of course, to orders from the commander of the Army of the Potomae. The Ninth Army-corps will be left intact, to hold the present line of works so long as the whole line now occupied by us is held. If, however, the troops to the left of the Ninth Corps are withdrawn, then the left of the corps may be thrown back so as to occupy the position held by the army prior to the capture of the Weldon road. All troops to the left of the Ninth Corps will be held in readiness to move at the shortest notice by such route as may be designated when the order is given.

General Ord will detach three divisions, two white and one colored, or so much of them as he can, and hold his present lines, and march for the present left of the Army of the Potomac. In the absence of further orders, or until further orders are given, the white divisions will follow the left column of the Army of the Potomac, and the colored division the right column. During the movement Major-General Weitzel will be left in command of all the forces remaining behind from the Army of the James.

The movement of troops from the Army of the James will commence on the night of the 27th instant. General Ord will leave behind the minimum number of cavalry necessary for picket duty, in the absence of the main army. A cavalry expedition, from General Ord's command, will also be started from Suffolk, to leave there on Saturday, the 1st of April, under Colonel Sumner, for the purpose of cutting the railroad about Hicksford. This, if accomplished, will have to be a surprise, and therefore from three to five hundred men will be sufficient. They should, however, be supported by all the infantry that can be spared from Norfolk and Portsmouth, as far out as to where the cavalry crosses the Blackwater. The crossing should probably be at Unite. Should Colonel Sumner succeed in reaching the Weldon road, he will be instructed to do all the damage possible to the triangle of roads between Hicksford, Weldon, and Gaston. The railroad-bridge at Weldon being fitted up for the passage of carriages, it might be practicable to destroy any accumulation of supplies the enemy may have collected south of the Roanoke. All the troops will move with four days' rations in haversacks and eight days' in wagons. To avoid as much hauling as possible, and to give the Army of the James the same number of days' supplies with the Army of the Potomac, General Ord will direct his commissary and quartermaster to have sufficient supplies delivered at the terminus of the road to fill up in passing. Sixty rounds of ammunition per man will be taken in wagons, and as much grain as the transportation on hand will carry, after taking the specified amount of other supplies. The densely wooded country in which the army has to operate making the use of much artillery impracticable, the amount taken with the army will be reduced to six or eight guns to each division, at the option of the army commanders.

All necessary preparations for carrying these directions into operation may be commenced at once. The reserves of the Ninth Corps should be massed as much as possible. While I would not now order an unconditional attack on the enemy's line by them, they should be ready and should make the attack if the enemy weakens his line in their front, without waiting for orders. In case they carry the line, then the whole of the Ninth Corps could follow up so as to join or cooperate with the balance of the army. To prepare for this, the Ninth Corps will have rations issued to them, same as the balance of the army. General Weitzel will keep vigilant watch upon his front, and if found at all practicable to break through at any point, he will do so. A success north of the James should be followed up with great promptness. An attack will not be feasible unless it is found that the enemy has detached largely. In that case it may be regarded as evident that the enemy are relying upon their local reserves principally for the defense of Richmond. Preparations may be made for abandoning all the line north of the James, except inclosed works—only to be abandoned, however, after a break is made in the lines of the enemy.

By these instructions a large part of the armies operating against Richmond is left behind. The enemy, knowing this, may, as an only chance, strip their lines to the merest skeleton, in the hope of advantage not being taken of it, while they hurl everything against the moving column, and return. It cannot be impressed too strongly upon commanders of troops left in the trenches not to allow this to occur without taking advantage of it. The very fact of the enemy coming out to attack, if he does so, might be regarded as almost conclusive evidence of such a weakening of his lines. I would have it particularly enjoined upon corps commanders that, in case of an attack from the enemy, those not attacked are not to wait for orders from the commanding officer of the army to which they belong, but that they will move promptly, and notify the commander of their action. I would also enjoin the same action on the part of division commanders when other parts of their corps are engaged. In like manner, I would urge the importance of following up a repulse of the enemy.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

Major-Generals Meade, Ord, and Sheridan.

Early on the morning of the 25th the enemy assaulted our lines in front of the Ninth Corps (which held from the Appomattox River toward our left), and carried Fort Stedman and a part of the line to the right and left of it, established themselves, and turned the guns of the fort against us; but our troops on either flank held their ground until the reserves were brought up, when the enemy was driven back with a heavy loss in killed and wounded and nineteen hundred prisoners. Our loss was sixty-eight killed, three hundred and thirty-seven wounded, and five hundred and six missing. General Meade at once ordered the other corps to advance and feel the enemy in their respective fronts. Pushing forward, they captured and held the enemy’s strongly intrenched picket-line in front of the Second and Sixth corps, and eight hundred and thirty-four prisoners. The enemy made desperate attempts to retake this line, but without success. Our loss in front of these was fifty-two killed, eight hundred and sixty-four wounded, and two hundred and seven missing. The enemy’s loss in killed and wounded was far greater.

General Sherman, having got his troops all quietly in camp about Goldsboro’, and his preparations for furnishing supplies to them perfected, visited me at City Point on the 27th of March, and stated that he would be ready to move, as he had previously written me, by the 10th of April, fully equipped and rationed for twenty days; if it should become necessary to bring his command to bear against Lee’s army, in cooperation with our forces in front of Richmond and Petersburg. General Sherman proposed in this movement to threaten Raleigh, and then, by turning suddenly to the right, reach the Roanoke at Gaston or thereabouts, whence he could move on to the Richmond and Danville railroad, striking it in the vicinity of Burkesville, or join the armies operating against Richmond, as might be deemed best. This plan he was directed to carry into execution if he received no further directions in the mean time. I explained to him the movement I had ordered to commence on the 29th of March; that if it should not prove as entirely successful as I hoped, I would cut the cavalry loose to destroy the Danville and South Side railroads, and thus deprive the enemy of further supplies, and also to prevent the rapid concentration of Lee’s and Johnston’s armies.

I had spent days of anxiety lest each morning should bring the report that the enemy had retraced the night before. I was firmly convinced that Sherman’s crossing the Roanoke would be the signal for Lee to leave. With Johnston and him combined, a long, tedious, and expensive campaign, consuming most of the summer, might become necessary. By moving out I would put the army in better condition for pursuit, and would at least, by the destruction of the Danville road, retard the concentration of the two armies of Lee and Johnston, and cause the enemy to abandon much material that he might otherwise save. I therefore determined not to delay the movement ordered.

On the night of the 27th Major-General Ord, with two divisions of the Twenty-fourth Corps, Major-General Gibbon commanding; and one division of the Twenty-fifth Corps, Brigadier-General Birney commanding, and Mackenzie's cavalry, took up his line of march in pursuance of the foregoing instructions, and reached the position assigned him near Hatcher's Run on the morning of the 29th. On the 28th the following instructions were given to General Sheridan:

Vol. II.—29

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA,
March 28, 1865.

GENERAL: The Fifth Army-corps will move by the Vaughan road at 3 A.M. to-morrow morning. The Second moves at about 9 A.M., having but about three miles to march to reach the point designated for it to take on the right of the Fifth Corps, after the latter reaching Dinwiddie Court House. Move your cavalry at as early an hour as you can, and without being confined to any particular road or roads. You may go out by the nearest roads in rear of the Fifth Corps, pass by its left, and passing near to or through Dinwiddie, reach the right and rear of the enemy as soon as you can. It is not the intention to attack the enemy in his intrenched position, but to force him out, if possible. Should he come out and attack us, or get himself where he can be attacked, move in with your entire force in your own way, and with the full reliance that the army will engage or follow, as circumstances will dictate. I shall be on the field, and will probably be able to communicate with you. Should I not do so, and you find that the enemy keeps within his main intrenched line, you may cut loose and push for the Danville road. If you find it practicable, I would like you to cross the South Side road, between Petersburg and Burkesville, and destroy it to some extent. I would not advise much detention, however, until you reach the Danville road, which I would like you to strike as near to the Appomattox as possible. Make your destruction on that road as complete as possible. You can then pass on to the South Side road, west of Burkesville, and destroy that in like manner.

After having accomplished the destruction of the two railroads, which are now the only avenues of supply to Lee's army, you may return to this army, selecting your road farther south, or you may go on into North Carolina and join General Sherman. Should you select the latter course, get the information to me as early as possible, so that I may send orders to meet you at Goldsboro'.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

MAJOR-GENERAL P. H. SHERIDAN.

On the morning of the 29th the movement commenced. At night the cavalry was at Dinwiddie Court House, and the left of our infantry line extended to the Quaker road, near its intersection with the Boydton plank road. The position of the troops from left to right was as follows: Sheridan, Warren, Humphreys, Ord, Wright, Parke.

Everything looked favorable to the defeat of the enemy and the capture of Petersburg and Richmond, if the proper effort was made.
I therefore addressed the following communication to General Sheridan, having previously informed him verbally not to cut loose for the raid contemplated in his orders until he received notice from me to do so:

Gravelly Creek, March 29, 1865.

General: Our line is now unbroken from the Appomattox to Dinwiddie. We are all ready, however, to give up all, from the Jerusalem plank road to Hatcher's Run, whenever the forces can be used advantageously. After getting into line south of Hatcher's, we pushed forward to find the enemy's position. General Griffin was attacked near where the Quaker road intersects the Boydton road, but repulsed it easily, capturing about one hundred men. Humphreys reached Dabney's Mill, and was pushing on when last heard from.

I now feel like ending the matter, if it is possible to do so, before going back. I do not want you, therefore, to cut loose and go after the enemy's roads at present. In the morning push around the enemy, if you can, and get on to his right rear. The movements of the enemy's cavalry may, of course, modify your action. We will act altogether as one army here, until it is seen what can be done with the enemy. The signal-officer at Cobb's Hill reported, at half-past 11 a.m., that a cavalry column had passed that point from Richmond toward Petersburg, taking forty minutes to pass.

U. S. Grant,

Lieutenant-General.

Major-General P. H. Sheridan.

From the night of the 29th to the morning of the 31st the rain fell in such torrents as to make it impossible to move a wheeled vehicle, except as corduroy roads were laid in front of them. During the 30th Sheridan advanced from Dinwiddie Court House toward Five Forks, where he found the enemy in full force. General Warren advanced and extended his line across the Boydton plank road to near the White Oak road, with a view of getting across the latter; but, finding the enemy strong in his front and extending beyond his left, was directed to hold on where he was, and fortify. General Humphreys drove the enemy from his front into his main line on the Hatcher, near Burgess's Mills. Generals Ord, Wright, and Parke made examinations in their fronts to determine the feasibility of an assault on the enemy's lines. The two latter reported favorably. The enemy confronting us, as he did, at every point from Richmond to our extreme left, I conceived his lines must be weakly held, and could be penetrated if my estimate of his forces was correct. I determined, therefore, to extend our line no farther, but to reinforce General Sheridan with a corps of infantry, and thus enable him to cut loose and turn the enemy's right flank, and with the other corps assault the enemy's lines. The result of the offensive effort of the enemy the week before, when he assaulted Fort Stedman, particularly favored this. The enemy's intrenched picket-line captured by us at that time threw the lines occupied by the belligerents so close together at some points that it was but a moment's run from one to the other.
Preparations were at once made to relieve General Humphreys's corps, to report to General Sheridan; but the condition of the roads prevented immediate movement. On the morning of the 31st General Warren reported favorably to getting possession of the White Oak road, and was directed to do so. To accomplish this, he moved with one division, instead of his whole corps, which was attacked by the enemy in superior force and driven back on the second division before it had time to form, and it in turn forced back upon the third division, when the enemy was checked. A division of the Second Corps was immediately sent to his support, the enemy driven back with heavy loss, and possession of the White Oak road gained. Sheridan advanced, and with a portion of his cavalry got possession of the Five Forks; but the enemy, after the affair with the Fifth Corps, reinforced the rebel cavalry, defending that point with infantry, and forced him back toward Dinwiddie Court House. Here General Sheridan displayed great generalship. Instead of retreating with his whole command on the main army, to tell the story of superior forces encountered, he deployed his cavalry on foot, leaving only mounted men enough to take charge of the horses. This compelled the enemy to deploy over a vast extent of wooded and broken country, and made his progress slow. At this juncture he despatched to me what had taken place, and that he was dropping back slowly on Dinwiddie Court House. General Mackenzie's cavalry and one division of the Fifth Corps were immediately ordered to his assistance. Soon after receiving a report from General Meade that Humphreys could hold our position on the Boydton road, and that the other two divisions of the Fifth Corps could go to Sheridan, they were so ordered at once. Thus the operations of the day necessitated the sending of Warren, because of his accessibility, instead of Humphreys, as was intended, and precipitated intended movements. On the morning of the 1st of April General Sheridan, reinforced by General Warren, drove the enemy back on Five Forks, where late in the evening he assaulted and carried his strongly fortified position, capturing all his artillery and between five and six thousand prisoners.

About the close of this battle Brevet Major-General Charles Griffin relieved Major-General Warren in command of the Fifth Corps. The report of this reached me after nightfall. Some apprehensions filled my mind lest the enemy might desert his lines during the night, and by falling upon General Sheridan before assistance could reach him, drive him from his position and open the way for retreat. To guard against this, General Miles's division of Humphreys's corps was sent to reinforce him, and a bombardment was commenced and kept up until four o'clock in the morning (April 2d), when an assault was ordered on the enemy's lines. General Wright penetrated the lines with his whole corps, sweeping everything before him, and to his left toward Hatcher's Run, capturing many guns and several thousand prisoners. He was closely followed by two divisions of General Ord's command, until he met the other division of General Ord's, that had succeeded in forcing the enemy's lines near Hatcher's Run. Generals Wright and Ord immediately swung to the right, and closed all of the enemy on that side of them in Petersburg, while General Humphreys pushed forward with two divisions, and joined General Wright on the left. General Parke succeeded in carrying the enemy's main-line, capturing guns and prisoners, but was unable to carry his inner line. General Sheridan, being advised of the condition of affairs, returned General Miles to his proper command. On reaching the enemy's lines immediately surrounding Petersburg, a portion of General Gibbon's corps, by a most gallant charge, captured two strong inclosed works,—the most salient, and commanding south of Petersburg,—thus materially shortening the line of investment necessary for taking in the city. The enemy south of Hatcher's Run retreated westward to Sutherland's Station, where they were overtaken by Miles's division. A severe engagement ensued, and lasted until both his right and left flanks were threatened by the advance of General Sheridan, who was moving from Ford's Station toward Petersburg, and a division sent by General Meade from the front of Petersburg, when he broke in the utmost confusion, leaving in our hands his guns and many prisoners. This force retreated by the main road along the Appomattox River. During the night of the 2d the enemy evacuated Petersburg and Richmond, and retreated toward Danville. On the morning of the 3d pursuit was commenced. General Sheridan pushed for the Danville road, keeping near the Appomattox, followed by General Meade with the Second and Sixth corps, while General Ord moved for Burkesville, along the South Side road; the Ninth Corps stretched along that road behind him. On the 4th General Sheridan struck the Danville road near Jetersville, where he learned that Lee was at Amelia Court House. He immediately intrenched himself and awaited the arrival of General Meade, who reached there the next day. General Ord reached Burkesville on the evening of the 5th.

On the morning of the 5th I addressed Major-General Sheridan the following communication:

Wilson's Station, April 5, 1865.

General: All indications now are that Lee will attempt to reach Danville with the remnant of his force. Sheridan, who was up with him last night, reports all that is left—horse, foot, and dragoons—at twenty thousand, much demoralized. We hope to reduce this number one half. I shall push on to Burkesville, and if a stand is made at Danville, will in a very few days go there. If you can possibly do so, push on from where you are, and let us see if we cannot finish the job with Lee's and Johnston's armies.
Whether it will be better for you to strike for Greensboro', or nearer to Danville, you will be better able to judge when you receive this. Rebel armies now are the only strategic points to strike at.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

MAJOR-GENERAL W. T. SHERMAN.

On the morning of the 6th it was found that General Lee was moving west of Jetersville, toward Danville. General Sheridan moved with his cavalry (the Fifth Corps having been returned to General Meade on his reaching Jetersville) to strike his flank, followed by the Sixth Corps, while the Second and Fifth corps pressed hard after, forcing him to abandon several hundred wagons and several pieces of artillery. General Ord advanced from Burkeville toward Farmville, sending two regiments of infantry and a squadron of cavalry, under Brevet Brigadier-General Theodore Read, to reach and destroy the bridges. This advance met the head of Lee's column near Farmville, which it heroically attacked and detained until General Read was killed and his small force overpowered. This caused a delay in the enemy's movements, and enabled General Ord to get well up with the remainder of his force, on meeting which the enemy immediately intrenched himself. In the afternoon General Sheridan struck the enemy south of Sailor's Creek, captured sixteen pieces of artillery and about four hundred wagons, and detained him until the Sixth Corps got up, when a general attack of infantry and cavalry was made, which resulted in the capture of six or seven thousand prisoners, among whom were many general officers. The movements of the Second Corps and General Ord's command contributed greatly to the day's success.

On the morning of the 7th the pursuit was renewed, the cavalry, except one division, and the Fifth Corps moving by Prince Edward's Court House; the Sixth Corps, General Ord's command, and one division of cavalry, on Farmville; and the Second Corps by the High Bridge road. It was soon found that the enemy had crossed to the north side of the Appomattox; but so close was the pursuit that the Second Corps got possession of the common bridge at High Bridge before the enemy could destroy it, and immediately crossed over. The Sixth Corps and a division of cavalry crossed at Farmville to its support.

Feeling now that General Lee's chance of escape was utterly hopeless, I addressed him the following communication from Farmville:

April 7, 1865.

GENERAL: The result of the last week must convince you of the hopelessness of further resistance on the part of the Army of Northern Virginia in this struggle. I feel that it is so, and regard it as my duty to shift from myself the responsibility of any further effusion of blood, by asking of you the surrender of that portion of the Confederate States army known as the Army of Northern Virginia.

GENERAL R. E. LEE.

Early on the morning of the 8th, before leaving, I received at Farmville the following:

April 7, 1865.

GENERAL: I have received your note of this date. Though not entertaining the opinion you express on the hopelessness of further resistance on the part of the Army of Northern Virginia, I reciprocate your desire to avoid useless effusion of blood, and therefore, before considering your proposition, ask the terms you will offer on condition of its surrender.

R. E. LEE, General.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL U. S. GRANT.

To this I immediately replied:

April 8, 1865.

GENERAL: Your note of last evening, in reply to mine of same date, asking the condition on which I will accept the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, is just received. In reply I would say that, peace being my great desire, there is but one condition I would insist upon, namely, that the men and officers surrendered shall be disqualified for taking up arms again against the government of the United States until properly exchanged. I will meet you, or will designate officers to meet any officers you may name for the same purpose, at any point agreeable to you, for the purpose of arranging definitely the terms upon which the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia will be received.

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General.

GENERAL R. E. LEE.

Early on the morning of the 8th the pursuit was resumed. General Meade followed north of the Appomattox, and General Sheridan, with all the cavalry, pushed straight for Appomattox Station, followed by General Ord's command and the Fifth Corps. During the day General Meade's advance had considerable fighting with the enemy's rear-guard, but was unable to bring on a general engagement. Late in the evening General Sheridan struck the railroad at Appomattox Station, drove the enemy from there, and captured twenty-five pieces of artillery, a hospital-train, and four trains of cars loaded with supplies for Lee's army. During this day I accompanied General Meade's column, and about midnight received the following communication from General Lee:

April 8, 1865.

GENERAL: I received, at a late hour, your note of to-day. In mine of yesterday I did not intend to propose the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, but to ask the terms of your proposition. To be frank, I do not think the emergency has arisen to call for the surrender of this army; but, as the restoration of peace should be the sole object of all, I desired to know whether your proposals would lead to that end. I cannot, therefore, meet you with a view to surrender the Army of Northern Virginia; but as far as your proposal may affect the Confederate States forces under my command, and tend to the restoration of peace, I should be pleased to meet you at 10 A.M. to-morrow on the old stage-road to Richmond, between the picket-lines of the two armies.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL U. S. GRANT.

Early on the morning of the 9th I returned him an answer as follows, and immediately started to join the column south of the Appomattox:

April 9, 1865.

GENERAL: Your note of yesterday is received. I have no authority to treat on the subject of peace; the meeting proposed for 10 A.M. to-day could lead to no good. I will state, however, general, that I am equally anxious for peace with yourself, and the whole North entertains the same feeling.
The terms upon which peace can be had are well understood. By the South laying down their arms they will hasten that most desirable event, save thousands of human lives, and hundreds of millions of property not yet destroyed. Seriously hoping that all our difficulties may be settled without the loss of another life, I subscribe myself, etc.,

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

On the morning of the 9th General Ord's command and the Fifth Corps reached Appomatoo Station just as the enemy was making a desperate effort to break through our cavalry. The infantry was at once thrown in. Soon after a white flag was received, requesting a suspension of hostilities pending negotiations for a surrender.

Before reaching General Sheridan's headquarters I received the following from General Lee:

April 9, 1865.

GENERAL: I received your note of this morning on the picket-line, whither I had come to meet you and ascertain definitely what terms were embraced in your proposal of yesterday with reference to the surrender of this army. I now ask an interview, in accordance with the offer contained in your letter of yesterday, for that purpose.

R. E. LEE,
General.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL U. S. GRANT.

The interview was held at Appomattox Court House, the result of which is set forth in the following correspondence:

APPOMATTOX COURT HOUSE, VIRGINIA,
April 9, 1865.

GENERAL: In accordance with the substance of my letter to you of the 8th instant, I propose to receive the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia on the following terms, to wit: Rolls of all the officers and men to be made in duplicate, one copy to be given to an officer to be designated by me, the other to be retained by such officer or officers as you may designate. The officers to give their individual paroles not to take up arms against the government of the United States until properly exchanged; and each company or regimental commander sign a like parole for the men of their commands. The arms, artillery, and public property to be parked and stacked, and turned over to the officers appointed by me to receive them. This will not embrace the side-arms of the officers, nor their private horses or baggage. This done, each officer and man will be allowed to return to his home, not to be disturbed by United States authority so long as they observe their paroles and the laws in force where they may reside.

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.

General R. E. Lee.

Headquarters Army of Northern Virginia,
April 9, 1865.

General: I have received your letter of this date containing the terms of surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia as proposed by you. As they are substantially the same as those expressed in your letter of the 8th instant, they are accepted. I will proceed to designate the proper officers to carry the stipulations into effect.

R. E. Lee,
General.

Lieutenant-General U. S. Grant.

The command of Major-General Gibbon, the Fifth Army-corps under Griffin, and Mackenzie's cavalry were designated to remain at Appomattox Court House until the paroling of the surrendered army was completed, and to take charge of the public property. The remainder of the army immediately returned to the vicinity of Burkeville.

General Lee's great influence throughout the whole South caused his example to be followed, and to-day the result is that the armies lately under his leadership are at their homes, desiring peace and quiet, and their arms are in the hands of our ordnance officers.

On the receipt of my letter of the 5th General Sherman moved directly against Joe Johnston, who retreated rapidly on and through Raleigh, which place General Sherman occupied on the morning of the 13th. The day preceding news of the surrender of General Lee reached him at Smithfield.

On the 14th a correspondence was opened between General Sherman and General Johnston, which resulted on the 18th in an agreement for a suspension of hostilities, and a memorandum or basis for peace, subject to the approval of the President. This agreement was disapproved by the President on the 21st, which disapproval, together with your instructions, was communicated to General Sherman by me in person on the morning of the 24th, at Raleigh, North Carolina, in obedience to your orders. Notice was at once given by him to General Johnston for the termination of the truce that had been entered into. On the 25th another meeting between them was agreed upon, to take place on the 26th, which terminated in the surrender and disbandment of Johnston's army upon substantially the same terms as were given to General Lee.

The expedition under General Stoneman from East Tennessee got off on the 20th of March, moving by way of Boone, North Carolina, and struck the railroad at Wytheville, Chambersburg, and Big Lick. The force striking it at Big Lick pushed on to within a few miles of Lyndenburg, destroying the important bridges, while with the main force he effectually destroyed it between New River and Big Lick, and then turned for Greensboro', on the North Carolina railroad; struck that road and destroyed the bridges between Danville and Greensboro', and between Greensboro' and the Yadkin, together with the depots of supplies along it, and captured four hundred prisoners. At Salisbury he attacked and defeated a force of the enemy under General Gardiner, capturing fourteen pieces of artillery and one thousand three hundred and sixty-four prisoners, and destroyed large amounts of army stores. At this place he destroyed fifteen miles of railroad and the bridges toward Charlotte. Thence he moved to Slatersville.

General Canby, who had been directed in January to make preparations for a movement from Mobile Bay against Mobile and the interior of Alabama, commenced his movement on the 20th of March. The Sixteenth Corps, Major-General A. J. Smith commanding, moved from Fort Gaines by water to Fish River; the Thirteenth Corps, under Major-General Gordon Granger, moved from Fort Morgan and joined the Sixteenth Corps on Fish River, both moving thence on Spanish Fort and investing it on the 27th; while Major-General Steele's command moved from Pensacola, cut the railroad leading from Tensas to Montgomery, effected a junction with them, and partially invested Fort Blakely. After a severe bombardment of Spanish Fort, a part of its line was carried on the 8th of April. During the night the enemy evacuated the fort. Fort Blakely was carried by assault on the 9th, and many prisoners captured; our loss was considerable. These successes practically opened to us the Alabama River, and enabled us to approach Mobile from the north. On the night of the 11th the city was evacuated, and was taken possession of by our forces on the morning of the 12th.

The expedition under command of Brevet Major-General Wilson, consisting of twelve thousand five hundred mounted men, was delayed by rains until March 22d, when it moved from Chickasaw, Alabama. On the 1st of April General Wilson encountered the enemy in force under Forrest near Ebenezer Church, drove him in confusion, captured three hundred prisoners and three guns, and destroyed the central bridge over the Cahawba River. On the 2d he attacked and captured the fortified city of Selma, defended by Forrest, with seven thousand men and thirty-two guns, destroyed the arsenal, armory, naval foundry, machine-shops, vast quantities of stores, and captured three thousand prisoners. On the 4th he captured and destroyed Tuscaloosa. On the 10th he crossed the Alabama River, and after sending information of his operations to General Canby, marched on Montgomery, which place he occupied on the 14th, the enemy having abandoned it. At this place many stores and five steamboats fell into our hands. Thence a force marched direct on Columbus, and another on West Point, both of which places were assaulted and captured on the 16th. At the former place we got fifteen hundred prisoners and fifty-two field-guns, destroyed two gunboats, the navy-yard, foundries, arsenal, many factories, and much other public property. At the latter place we got three hundred prisoners, four guns, and destroyed nineteen locomotives and three hundred cars. On the 20th he took possession of Macon, Georgia, with sixty field-guns, twelve hundred militia, and five generals, surrendered by General Howell Cobb. General Wilson, hearing that Jeff. Davis was trying to make his escape, sent forces in pursuit, and succeeded in capturing him on the morning of May 11th.

On the fourth day of May General Dick Taylor surrendered to General Canby all the remaining rebel forces east of the Mississippi.

A force sufficient to ensure an easy triumph over the enemy under Kirby Smith, west of the Mississippi, was immediately put in motion for Texas, and Major-General Sheridan designated for its immediate command; but on the twenty-sixth day of May, and before they reached their destination, General Kirby Smith surrendered his entire command to Major-General Canby. This surrender did not take place, however, until after the capture of the rebel President and Vice-President; and the bad faith was exhibited of first disbanding most of his army and permitting an indiscriminate plunder of public property.

Owing to the report that many of those lately in arms against the government had taken refuge upon the soil of Mexico, carrying with them arms rightfully belonging to the United States, which had been surrendered to us by agreement,—among them some of the leaders who had surrendered in person,—and the disturbed condition of affairs on the Rio Grande, the orders for troops to proceed to Texas were not changed.

There have been severe combats, raids, expeditions, and movements to defeat the designs and purposes of the enemy, most of them reflecting great credit on our arms, and which contributed greatly to our final triumph, that I have not mentioned. Many of these will be found clearly set forth in the reports herewith submitted; some in the telegrams and brief despatches announcing them, and others, I regret to say, have not as yet been officially reported.

For information touching our Indian difficulties I would respectfully refer to the reports of the commanders of departments in which they have occurred.

It has been my fortune to see the armies of both the West and the East fight battles, and from what I have seen I know there is no difference in their fighting qualities. All that it was possible for men to do in battle they have done. The Western armies commenced their battles in the Mississippi Valley, and received the final surrender of the remnant of the principal army opposed to them in North Carolina. The armies of the East commenced their battles on the river from which the Army of the Potomac derived its name, and received the final surrender of their old antagonists at Appomattox Court House, Virginia. The splendid achievements of each have nationalized our victories, removed all sectional jealousies (of which we have unfortunately experienced too much), and the cause of crimination and recrimination that might have followed had either section failed in its duty. All have a proud record, and all sections can well congratulate themselves and each other for having done their full share in restoring the supremacy of law over every foot of territory belonging to the United States. Let them hope for perpetual peace and harmony with that enemy whose manhood, however mistaken the cause, drew forth such herculean deeds of valor.

I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. Grant,
Lieutenant-General.
INDEX

The asterisks indicate the location of the biographical notes.

Abercrombie, J. J., II, *177, 178
Abolitionists, I, 170, 171
Acworth, Ga., II, 430
Adairsville, Ga., fighting near, II, 423
Adams, Silas, in Stoneman’s raid, II, 91
Adamsville, Tenn., I, 289
Adjutant-General, U. S. A. See Thomas, L.
Agriculture. See FARMING
Aiken’s Landing, Va., I, 469
Alabama, secession. See ARKANSAS I, 83; Boussen’s raid into, II, 59; Sherman asks to have Thomas campaign in, 274; Thomas’s orders countermanded, 281; Forrester raids in, 428; pursuit of Hood stopped by rains in, 433, 434; Canby’s movements in, 443, 444, 458; Wilson’s expedition into, 446
Alabama River, the, Canby to move on, II, 426; opened to Union troops, 458; Wilson crosses, 459
Alameda, the, I, 125
Alamo, massacre at the, I, 34, 40
Albertis, William, killed at Vera Cruz, I, 96
Aldrich’s, Va., II, 101, 123, 126
Alexander, E. P., II, 103
Alexandria, L. A., Banks assembles his army at, II, 426; retreat of Banks to, and evacuation of, 426
Alexandria railroad, Va., Burnside on the, II, 404
Allatoona, Ga., Johnston abandons, II, 86; capture and fortification of, 86; defense of, 297; Sherman moves against, 423
Alleghany Mountains, railroad over the, II, 19; boundary of the Military Division of the Mississippi, 191, II, 54; 81, 399; Crook and Averell cross, 73
“Alps,” steamer, at Fort Donelson, I, 246
Alsop’s, Va., II, 101, 119, 120
Ameca Ameca, Mex., I, 144, 145
Amelia Court House, Va., Lee at, II, 316, 323-325, 453; Meade orders an advance on, 327; Lee’s movement from, 328, 329
American citizens, rights of native-born, I, 189
American Party, rise of the, I, 109
Ames, Adelbert, at Fort Fisher, II, 265, 269; reinforced by Terry, 270
Amherst Court House, Va., destruction of railroad at, II, 445
Ammon, Jacob, drives Breckinridge from Knoxville, II, 434
Ammonition-train, a motley, I, 407, 408
Amoecota, Mex., occupation of, I, 104
Amphipolis, Gen., strength of his army at Monterey, I, 89; surrenders the city, 88
Anderson, G. T., II, 101, 216
Anderson, J. B., military manager of railroads, I, 515
Anderson, Richard H., at Spotsylvania, I, 142, II, 122, 123, 127; visit to Popocatpetl, I, 142-145; his command, II, 101, *121; in battle of the Wilderness, 113; beats Grant to Spotsylvania, I, 222; reasons for his capture of Spotsylvania, I, 222, 123; intrenchments, 123; assaulted by Warren, 123; Grant’s anxiety to crush, 123; on the Po, 128, 129; commanding Lee’s left at Cold Harbor, 163; movement along Warren’s front, 163; pressed by Wright and Smith, 164
Andersonville, Ga., attempt to release prisoners at, II, 91
Annapolis, Md., Burnside’s corps at, II, 56, 57; Burnside’s advance from, 65; Schofield ordered to, 274, 280
Antietam, Md., Southern view of the battle of, II, 410
Anton Lizardo, the harbor of, I, 95
Appalachia River, Canby to move on, II, 429
Appomattox Court House, Va., Grant’s ride to, II, 338; the surrender at, 349-349, 456, 457, 460; number of troops surrendered at, 351
Appomattox River, the, Butler’s position between the James and, II, 74, 407; defenses of Petersburg on, 187; threatened assault on Petersburg between the James and, 406; Union lines on, 231, 334, 333, 448, 451; Merritt drives the enemy to, 312, 322; proposed movements on, 315, 316; Lee’s fugitives cross, 321, 453, 454, 455; its course, 329; raid against bridges on, 410; W. F. Smith’s assault on Petersburg lines on, 413
Appomattox Station, Va., Sheridan pushes to, to capture Lee’s trains, II, 335, 335, 455; Custer ordered to, 335; engagement at, 336, 456
Archer, J. J., II, 102
Arkadelphia, Ark., Steele reaches, II, 406
Arkansas, secession of, I, 183; Confederate movement in, 219; Halleck commanding in, 231; Steele commanding in, 488, II, 65; embraced in Sherman’s military division, 81; in the enemy’s hands, 398; guerrilla warfare in, 398; Steele ordered to move from, 490; Price’s retreat to, 428
Arkansas Post, Ark., capture of, I, 366
Arkansas River, operations on the, I, 366, II, 247; Union holdings on the, 53, 398
Army of Northern Virginia, defeats Pope and invades Maryland, I, 356; driven from Pennsylvania, 478; on the Rapidan, II, 55, 57; organization, 101-104; respect for Army of the Potomac, 172; preference for breastwork fighting, 172, 174, 409; a channel of supply for 177; compared with Army of the Potomac, 183; Sheridan avers the possibility of its capture, 324; demoralization, 325, 350; in desperate plight, 339; long struggle with the Army of the Cumberland, 185; see Lee, Army of the Cumberland, depletion and peril of, I, 493; peril at Chattanooga, 495; Thomas assigned to command, 497; besieging of Fort Donelson, 503; expedition to Brown's Ferry, 504; improving its condition, 511; troops from, in Lookout Valley, 519; plan of assault at Chattanooga, 520; strength of position at Chattanooga, II, 2; captures at Missionary Ridge, 17; participation in battle of Chattanooga, 59; its work at Chattanooga planned beforehand, 23; at Chattanooga, 82; engagement before Atlanta, 88; in Sherman's march against Johnston, 422

Army of the Gulf, united with Army of the Tennessee, I, 478

Army of the James, the left wing of the united armies, II, 56; commanded by Gen. Butler, 56; reinforcements for, 56; protection to Washington, 57; proposed junction between Army of the Potomac and, 340; ordered to join at Drury's Bluff, 41; united with Army of the Potomac, 74, 75, 447; holds Bermuda Hundred, 190, 191, 209; in battle of White Oak Road, 209; in battle of Manassas, 422, 490; sent to Burke's Station, 316, 317; Parke ordered to protect its rear, 322, 323; in engagement at Appomattox Station, 338; ordered into camp at Burkeville Station, 362; moves simultaneously with the Army of the Potomac, 404; Sheridan reinforces the, 429

Army of the Mississippi, left wing of Hancock's army at Pittsburg Landing, I, 367; proposed movement, 311; reinforcements sent to Buell from, 333; Sheridan's command in, 331; disposition, Sept. 4, 1862, 335, 336; depletion of, 335; put on the defensive, 344; strength after Corinth, 349

Army of the Ohio, ordered to reinforce Grant, I, 273; arrangements for, at Hamburg Landing, 273; in battle of Shiloh, 301, 399, 438; at Halleck's army at Pittsburg Landing, 307; reports of Shiloh sent to Halleck from, 308; to repair Memphis and Charleston railroad, 317, 318, 336; possibilities of early capture of Chattanooga by, 333; plight of animals belonging to the, II, 34; strength, 238; ordered to reinforce Thomas, 238; Morgan's raids in rear of, 354; commanded by Burnside, 382; in Sherman's movement against Johnston, 422

Army of the Potomac, the "regular brigade" in the, I, 231; Grant's interest in its movements, 289, 299; in battle of Chattanooga, II, 20; visit to, at Brandy Station, 45-47; changes in, 46; Meade in command, 47, 359, 394; an independent command, 55; possession of the Rapidan, 55; difficulty of provisioning, 55; center of the united armies, 56, 71; supported by the Ninth Corps, 56; principal protection of Washington, 57, 401; confronted by Lee on the Rapidan, 57; reinforced by Buford, 58, 62, 403; Grant to stay with, 58; Sheridan to command the cavalry, 99; question of moving by right or left flank, 51; reducing transportation, 65; question of moving by water to the James, 66; Mosby's operations in rear of, 67; junction with Army of the James, 73-76, 492; Sheridan rejoins, 79, 80, 405; grand movement, 95 et seq., 404; organization, 96-100; rations, forecasting, 96; surplus of artiller y, 97; quartermaster's corps, 104, 105, 411; ordered to march light, 105; position, May 5, 1864, 106; skill in intruding, 116, 132; movement through Field's, 135; orders for night marches, 119, 120; Lee assumes its retreat, 121, 124; possible race to Richmond, 122; Sheridan ordered to cut loose from, 133; reducing the artillery, 144, 182; Sheridan again with, 152; moving right wing from position south of the North Anna, 154 et seq.; respect of Army of Northern Virginia for, 172; disheartened at Cold Harbor, 172; attempt to get south of the James, 174 et seq.; strength at opening of Wilderness campaign, 182; reinforcements for, 182; strength at crossing of the James, 182, 183; advance reaches the James, 185; compared with Army of Northern Virginia, 185; Grant rejoins, 186, 187; invests Petersburg, 190, 191, 412; Hunter ordered to return to, 192; Wright ordered back to, 214, 215; losses 118 chief of staff, 226; length of lines, 231; cavalry operating north of the James, 233; provision for Sheridan's cutting lines, 233; order given at Danville, 316; its record, 319, 320; forced march ordered, 322; ordered into camp at Burkeville Station, 362; commanded by Hooker, 382; territory covered by, 398; Lee's army its objective, 401; to move simultaneously with the Army of the James, 404; Beauregard brings reinforcements against, 426; W. F. Smith ordered to reinforce, 408; long struggle with Army of Northern Virginia, 410, 460; moves by the enemy's right flank, 423; Sheridan rejoins, Mar. 27, 1865, 445; dismounted cavalry ordered to City Point, 447; movements, Mar. 29, 447

Army of the Tennessee, Sherman's command in the, I, 278; Generals Buford, 278; commanders of, 271; losses on first day at Shiloh, 286; share in the battle, 301; right wing of Halleck's army at Pittsburg Landing, 307; reports of the battle of Shiloh, 308; dissatisfaction at capture of Corinth, 316; confronted by Van Dorn, 327; weakness at Corinth, 328; unites with Army of the Gulf, 478; Sherman assigned to command, 506; in battle of Chattanooga, II, 20; losses at Atlanta, 89; enthusiasm at Vicksburg, 172, 173; Logan's service with, 233, 243; Howard appointed to command, 235; in Sherman's movement against Johnston, 422; part returned by Banks to Sherman, 424, 425

Army of the Valley District, organization, II, 149

Artillery, surplus of, in Army of the Potomac, II, 97, 144, 183

Ashland, Va., Sheridan destroys railroad and supplies at, II, 78, 496, 443; Sheridan attacked at, 293

Aspinwall, Colombia, I, 151

Athens, Ala., captured by Forrest, II, 428; Buford's unsuccessful attack on, 428

Athens, Tenn., Gen. Dodge halted at, I, 513 services to the government, I. *192, 193: sheds new light on history, 270; report of capture of Prayfiss's division, 293; injustice to McCook, 222; accuracy of his account of Shiloh, 303; preserves story of Sherman's opposition to the Vicksburg campaign, 134; mentions Butler and his "behalf." 342

Bailey, Bartlett, I, 14, 15, 18

Bailey, Dr., I, 14, 15

Bailey, Joseph, constructs dams on Red River, 149

Baird, Absalom, in Chattanooga campaign, H, 73, 14, 18

Baker's Creek, Miss., 1, 427, 429, 431, 432

Ballard, 457

Ballard, P., in the Mississippi, 38, 403; Ballot, his exercise in the South, I, 178, 179

Baltimore, Md., troops ordered to, II, 196, 416, 438; Hunter advised to establish headquarters at, 207; Grant visits, 215; Wallace moves on the enemy from, 416

Baltimore and Ohio railroad, operations on the, II, 195, 207, 215, 216, 438; importance. 419

Banks, Nathaniel P., on the Red River, I, *410, 419; correspondence with, concerning Port Hudson, 410, 418, 435, 440, 458; plan to bring his forces against Vicksburg, 440; Grant ordered to cooperate with, 418, 456; informed of the fall of Vicksburg, 475; relief to be sent to, 475; Grant resolves to unite with, 481; fails to unite with Grant, 431; movements for, 485, 486, II, 22, 58, 65, 84, 198, 400, 426; visit to, at New Orleans, I, 486; Grant reviews his army, 487; his command coterminous with the River, I, 55; possession of the Mississippi, 491; expectation of his clearing the west shore of the Mississippi, II, 39; proposed cooperation with Sherman, 42, 49; letter from Grant to, directed to move upon Mobile, 49; orders to, for spring of 1864, 55, 59, 61; ordered to turn over defense of Red River to Steele, 58, 61, 65, 400; ordered to return troops to Sherman, 58, 403; ordered to abandon Texas, 58, 400; to assemble troops at New Orleans, 61; to move against Mobile, 61; to cooperate with Sherman in securing railroad between Mobile, I, 442; Chattanooga, 61; operations on the Red River, 64, 65, 72, 406, 426, 427; opposes the Red River expedition, 65; to take and hold Shreveport, 65, 499; succeeded by Canby, 81, 142; operations in Louisiana, 122, 435; suggests that Steele move from Arkansas, 400; to return troops to New Orleans, 400; Farragut to cooperate with, 400, 401; returns troops to Sherman, 425; Steele's cooperation with, 426, 427

Bankston, Miss., Grierson's raid at, II, 434

Barlow, Francis C., his command, II, 97; in battle of the Wilderness, *110; in battle of Spottsylvania, 129-132, 135, 136, assault at Cold Harbor, 166, 167

Barnard, J. C., sent to investigate Butler's position, II, *74; his report, 75; communicating with Sherman as to northward campaign, 271, 273

Barrett's, Miss., Rosecrans at, I, 342

Barrett, Major, attempts to capture Grant, I, 237

Barringer, Rufus, his command, II, 102; encounters Russell's command, 156

Bartlett, J. J., II, 98

INDEX

Atkinson, E. N., II, 101

Atlanta, Ga., possibilities of a bloodless advance to, I, 332; preparations for campaign against, II, 33; defended by Johnston, 48, 399; importance of capturing, 48, 49, 71, 227, 309; Sherman's campaign against, 49, 58, 210, 215; country between Dalton and, 83; time occupied in capture, 83; commencement of final movement toward, 83; Hood abandons his lines at, 83; strength, 88; battles before and at, 88-90, 423; railroad cut between Augusta and, 93; operations in, 227, 192, 195, 412; reports guarding Sherman, 129, 318

Auger, C. C., expedition with, I, 59, 61

Augusta, Ga., the railroad cut between Atlanta and, II, 427; proposed movement against, 231, 232, 429; threatened by Slocum, 246; Sherman's apparent objective, 249, 247; importance of capturing, 250; the occupation, 257, 437

Austin, Tex., paying off troops at, I, 47

Austria, a prince of, on the Mexican throne, II, 378

"Autocrat," transport steamer at Nashville, I, 264

Averell, W. W., operations against the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, II, 58, 72, 411; reports operations in West Virginia, 140, 411; junction with Crook, 191, 411; Hunter's junction with, 192, 195, 412; victory at Winchester, 147

Averyboro, N. C., fighting between Johnston and Sherman at, II, 285, 442

Axiction of war, I, 335

Ayllet, W. R., II, 101

Ayles, C. V., and Sherman at, II, 79

Ayres, C. C., Gen. Scott's position at, I, 109

Ayres, Romyen B., his command, II, 98; in action May 14, 1864, 140; in battle of Five Forks, 305

Aztec town, an old, I, 145, 147

Babcock, O. E., report of meeting with Lee at Appomattox, II, *341

Badeau, Adam, discovers Grant's offer of VOL. II.—30
INDEX

Barton, Seth M., II, 101
Base of supplies, question of operating with or without a, I, 353, 359, 368, 411, 417, 427, 434
Baton Rouge, La., fall of, I, 317; Grierson's raid at, 408; Gaoby's expedition from, II, 431
Battery No. 10, Gordon's assault at, II, 296-298
Battery No. II, capture and recapture of, II, 297, 298
Battery No. 12, capture and recapture of, II, 297, 298
Battle, C. A., II, 101
Baxter, A. S., sent to order Wallace to Pittsburg Landing, I, 277; Wallace's interpretation of his orders, 278
Baxter, Henry, his command, II, 98; in battle of the Wilderness, *108
Bayou Baker, I, 378, 379
Bayou Macon, I, 373, 374
Bayou Pierre, I, 401, 402, 405, 406, 408
Bayou Vidal, I, 388
Bean's Station, Tenn., concentration of troops against Dickbridge at, II, 434
Bear Creek, I, 340, 352
Beaufort, N. C., the Fort Fisher expeditions at, II, 263, 268, 436, 438
Belfry, S. C. Union possession of, II, 33, 398; Sherman moves his right wing to, 276
Beauregard, P. G. T., at Cerro Gordo, I, 100; at Shiloh, 298, 299, 300, 303; at Corinth, 310, 312; evacuates Corinth, 315; superseded by Bragg, 328; danger of his coming to Lee's assistance, II, 66; attacks Butler, 74; separated from Richmond, 133; sent to guard Richmond, 144; commanding south of Richmond, 188; reinforced by Hoke, 188; fortifies Petersburg, 189, 203; in general command, 239; appeals to citizens of Georgia, 239; confronting Sherman, 283; attacked by Kautz, 407; brings reinforcements against the Army of the Potomac, 408
Beauregard, Va., recapture of Federal prisoners by Sheridan at, II, 78; plan to destroy the Virginia Central railroad west of, 175; Sheridan destroys depot at, 407
Belan garita, the, I, 117, 120
Belfry, the gun in the, I, 123, 124
Bell, Louis, in assault on Fort Fisher, II, 263; killed, *270
Belk Plains, Va., getting supplies from, II, 133
Belleville, Ill., mustering in troops at, I, 187
Belmont, Mo., contemplated attack on, I, 211; the battle of, 210-229
Benham, H. W., his command, II, 109; superintends bridge-work at the crossing of the Chickahominy, *182; dismounted cavalry to report to, at City Point, 447
Benicia Barracks, Cal., the Fourth Infantry at, I, 161
Benjamin, Calvin, I, *50-53
Benning, Henry L., II, 101
Benton, Thomas H., attempt to supersede Scott by, I, 92, 93, 133
"Benton," the Porter's flagship, running the batteries at Vicksburg, I, 386
Bentonville, N. C., fighting between Johnston and Sherman at, II, 285, 442
Bermuda Hundred, Va., seizure of, by Butler, II, 73, 496; question of marching the army toward, 180; visit to Bluffton, 185, 186, 412; supplies ordered for Hancock from, 187; held by the Army of the James, 190, 191, 299; report of engineers at, 200; relieved by Meade from, 200, 408; troops at, informed of capture of outer works of Petersburg, 310; Butler's position at, 406-408; the enemy partially retires from, 413; Wright to send troops to, 413
Berryville, Va., Sheridan near, II, 419
Bethel, O., Jesse R. Grant removes from Georgetown to, I, 21; a humiliating incident in, 21; visit to parents at, 27
Bethel, Tenn., Lew Wallace's march toward, I, 278; Ord's command at, 335
Bethesda Church, Va., II, 165, 166
Beverly, Va., proposed expedition against Virginia and Tennessee railroad from, II, 55, 61, 403
Big Black River, the dangers of attack on, I, 408; reconnaissances ordered toward, II, 405; McPherson crosses, 413; McCleland's position on, 414, 415; guarding the crossing of, 419; the enemy's design to cross, 425; pursuit of the enemy to, after Champion's Hill, 433; Pemberton falls back to, 435; possibilities of Pemberton's crossing, 437; Sherman ordered to, 457; hopes of crossing at, Bridgeport, 438; battle of, 440-442; depositions on the bridge over, 440; rebridging, 449, 441; demoralization of the enemy at, 443; Federal losses and Confederate strength at, 447; need of cavalry on, 448; Blair's work on, 445; troops on, 457; Sherman assigned to command at, 458; Johnston crosses, 458; Johnston between Brownsville and, 464; Sherman crosses, 482, II, 41; Sherman's troops on, I, 482, 484; Osborn's operations on, I, 431
Big Black River Bridge, success of the Army of the Tennessee at, I, 172
Big Blue, battle of the, II, 427, 428
Big Lick, N. C., Stoneman destroys the railroad at, II, 438
Big Sandy, McCleland at, I, 413; Sherman moves to, 413
Big Shanty, Ga., Hood reaches, II, 429
Big South Fork, Cumberland River, I, 511
Big Sunflower River, water communications of, I, 93
Bird's Point, Mo., orders to troops at, I, 211; Col. Oglesby appointed to command at, 214
Birney, D. B., in battle of the Wilderness, II, 108; in battle of Spotsylvania, *129, 131, 133, 136; Mott's brigade assigned to, 137; sent to Tyler's assistance, 143; in battle of Cold Harbor, 165; returns to Hancock, 177; commanding Hancock's corps, 190; in investment of Petersburg, 191; threatening movements against Richmond, 209, 218; captures Fort Harrison, 421; moves to Hatchet's Run, 450
Black Bayou, water communications of, I, 377; Sherman's expedition on, 375, 379
Black Fort, Monterey, the, I, 89, 92
Black River. See Big BLACK RIVER
Black's Station, Va., Kautz's raid at, II, 407
Blackwater River, the, II, 407, 447
Blair, Austin, governor of Michigan, I,
INDEX

467

*334; appoints Sheridan colonel of 24th Michigan Cavalry, 334
Blair, Frank F., leader of the Free-Soil Uprising in St. Louis, I, *183, 188; raises a regiment, 188; ordered to Grand Gulf, 412; arrives before Jackson, *420; joins McClellan, 423; reaches New Auburn, 424; moves forward to Raymond, near Raymond, 426; near Auburn, 426; his command turned over to McClellan, 428; ordered to Edward's Station, 428; at Champion's Hill, 429, 431, 422, 435; ordered to Bragg'sport, 437, 438, 441; raid up the Yazoo, 434, 435; troops sent to Mechanicsburg, 435; character and military ability, 480; crosses the Tennessee at Eastport; reinforces Sherman, II, 86; commanding the Seventeenth Corps, 234; quits the field for political purposes, 234; returns to his command, 235
Bliss, W. W. S., adjutant-general to Gen. Taylor, I, *58; death of, 164
Blockade, Great Britain insists on effective, II, 321; the naval, 398
Blockade-runners, capture of one at Savannah, II, 232; principal inlet for, 361, 438; capture of, at Fort Fisher, 363
Blount, B., in possession of Union holdings, II, 53; operations in the, 152, 216, 220, 226, 420
Boggs, Harry, in business with, I, 168
Boggs & Grant, the firm of, I, 168
Bolton, S., threatened by the enemy, I, 327, 332, 344; guarding the Mississippi Central railroad at, 327, 352; skirmishing near, 329; repulse of the enemy at, 332; Grant's command at, reinforcing Corinth from, 336, 338; reinforced, 336, 344; repairing the railroad at, 332; movement on Grand Junction from, 332
Bolton, Miss., troops ordered to, I, 425, 428; Hovey at, 428; capture of, 426; Steele en route to, 428; Sherman's march from Jackson to, 437; Sherman concentrates at, 482
Boone, N. C., Stonewall's movement via, II, 468
Boonville, Mo., Grant ordered to secure cash from banks in, I, 293; Sheridan's victory at, II, 341
Booth, L. F., colonel 1st Alabama colored regiment, II, 425
Bottom's Bridge, Va., Sheridan at, II, 79; Wright ordered to send troops to, 177
Bourbon County, Ky., early visit to, I, 16
Bowen, John S., commanding at Port Gibson, I, *402, 403; bearer of Pemberton's proposals at Vicksburg, 465; Grant refuses to meet, 496; conference with A. J. Smith, 467; anxiety for complete surrender, 467
Bowers, T. S., on Grant's staff, II, *69; detects William Swinton cavedropping, 69, 70; letter to, April 2, 1868, 313
Bowles, P. D., II, 101
Bowling Green, Ky., the Confederate line at, I, 232; Buell confronting Buckner at, 232; fortifications of, 266; Johnston's retreat from, 266; capture of, 304
Bowling Green, Va., Hancock's march to, II, 147
Brow's Neck, S. C., Hatch's expedition at, II, 432
Boydton plank road, movements on the, II, 422; Union line at, 450-452; Griffin attacked near, 451
Bragg, Braxton, possibilities of injuring, after Corinth, I, 318; at Rome, Ga., *329; superseded Beauregard, 325; proposes to move against Chattanooga, 325; march to the Oholo River, 336; aiming to prevent reinforcement of, in Middle Tennessee, 336, 537; reinforces Johnston, 446, 452; proposes rapid movement against, from Memphis to Lookout Mountain, as a base, 484, 485; Rosecrans ordered to move against, 492; confronting Rosecrans at Murfreesboro, 492; Rosecrans's tactical skill here, 492; moves against Rosecrans, 494; takes possession of Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain, 494; possession of roads into Chattanooga, 495; report of operations, 495-497; proposal to reinforce, 501; Rosecrans's treatment of, 498; Sec. of War's response, 501; Rosecrans's reasons for, 502
Breslaw, T., oiler, 226
Brewster, W. R., II, 97
Brice's Cross Roads, Miss., battle of, II, 197
Bridge Creek, I, 369
Bridgeport, Ala., troops ordered to, I, 437, 438; arrival of Sherman and Blair at, 441; Rosecrans loses the river road to, 494; terminus of Union possession of railroad between Nashville and Chattanooga, 495; Grant at, en route for Chattanooga, 498; opening in the "cracker line" to, 501; concentration of reinforcements at, 504; the Tennessee crossed from Lookout Valley to, 506, 515; transportation and supplies at, 506, 513; navigation of the Tennessee below Kelly's Ferry and, 506; Sherman arrives at, 516-518; Sherman's trip from Chattanooga to, 523; communication with Chat-
INDEX

Bridges, crossing the bayous by, I, 383, 394, 405
Brooke, T. H., in battle of Cold Harbor, II, 167
Brown, B. Gratz, commanding at Ironton, I, *207
Brown, George, commanding the "Indianola," I, 287
Brown, Henry W., II, 99
Brown, Jacob, occupies Fort Brown, I, 64; killed, 72
Brown, John, character of, I, 4
Brown, Joseph E., governor of Georgia, II, *223; denounced by Pres. Davis, 228; flight from Milledgeville, 241
Brown, Owen, A. Grant works for, works for, I, 4
Brown County, O. the Grants in, I, 7
Brown's Ferry, Tenn., operations, navigation, roads, etc., at, I, 501, 504-506, 508, 509, 520, 522, 523, II, 1, 4, 9, 59, 90
Brownsville, Tex., first settlement of, I, 63, 72; probable effect of garrisoning, 484
Brinnsburg, Miss., operations at, I, 385, 400-403, 411, 446, 485
Bryant, Goode, II, 101
Bryan, T. M., Jr., II, 99
Buchanan, James, Grant votes for, I, *171; helplessness of his administration, 186, 181; secessionists leave his Cabinet, 181; Ford's actions in the Cabinet of, 253
Buckland, Ralph C., I, *275
Buckner, Simon B., trip to Popocatetepi, I, 112-14; confronting Buckner at Bowling Green, 233; reinforcements at Fort Donelson, 241; notified by Halleck of movement against Fort Donelson, 241; advance on Nashville, 262, 263; letter to C. F. Smith from, 263; letter from Grant to, 264; meeting with Grant, 264; calls upon Smith for assistance, 264; delayed march on Nashville, 266; ordered to reinforce Grant, 273; at Columbia, Tenn., 274; en route to reinforce the Army of the Tennessee, 274; awaiting his arrival, 275-277; arrival of, 277; meeting with, at Pittsburg Landing, 278; berates Stragglers at Shiloh, 283; condition of affairs at Shiloh before arrival of, 285, 286; loss on the first day, 286; reinforcements for, at Pittsburg Landing, 287; position on the morning of April 7, 288; efforts of, 285, 286; charges of disloyalty against, 295, 296; Grant's reply to, 296; reports on Grant in the New York "World," 296; subsequent attempt to restore him to command, 296, II, 48, 90; A. S. Johnston's plan to crush, I, 208; strength at Shiloh, 302; against, at Shiloh, the Rebel forces, 306; commanding center of Halleck's army at Pittsburg Landing, 307; transmits reports of Shiloh direct to Halleck, 308; sent in pursuit from Corinth, 316; ordered back to reinforce Cumberland Railroad, 317, 313, 325, 333; difficulties of his march through a hostile country, 329; reinforcing, 325, 330, 332, 336, 341; march to Chattanooga, 392, 393; possibilities of his early capture of Chattanooga, 333; march to Louisville, 336; succeeded in command by Rosecrans, 349; declines to serve under Sherman or Canby, II, 50
Buena Vista, Mex., I, 92, 93, 102
Buffalo, the southern hered of, I, 62
Buford, Abram, raids in Kentucky, II, 423; in Alabama, II, 424
Bull-fights, Mexican, I, 137-140
Bull Gap, I, 283, 416
Bull Run, Va., II, 63, 65, 99, 104
Bulwer, Grant's fondness for works of, I, 20
"Bummers," Sherman's, II, 242-244
Bunker Hill, Mass., Capt. Noah Grant in battle of, I, 3
Burbury, G., drives Morgan out of Kentucky, II, 425; expedition against Saltville, 428; operations against Breckiridge, 434
Burgess's Mills, Va., Humphreys's success at, II, 451
Burke's Station, Va., the Army of the James ordered to, 316, 317
Burkesville, Va., Crook sent toward, II, 322; Sheridan's operations at and near, 323, 324, 449, 450; Lee's army intercepted at, 324; Ord's operations near, 330, 332, 463, 464; Grant at, 332, 349, 357; the Armies of the James and of the Potomac ordered into camp at, 362; Wilson destroys the railroad at, 415; Grant determines to push to, 453; the army returns to, 457
Burlington, N. J., visits to, II, 213, 357-359
Burnham, Hiram, killed in assault on Fort Harrison, II, *218
Burnside, A. E., possibilities of avoiding his imprisonment at Knoxville, I, 315; reinforced from, at Vicksburg, 366; the Ninth Corps to be returned to, 475; at Knoxville, *497; instructions to, 457, 498; draws supplies from East Tennessee, 511, II, 28, 29; desperate condition of, I, 511, 515; question of getting supplies to, 513; fears for his safety, 515, 516, 523, II, 2, 11, 24, 32; Wheeler and Longstreet move against, I, 515-519; advice to, 516, 517; encouragement for, 516, II, 12, 19; confidence of, I, 516, 529; despatch from, 517; cut off from telegraphic communication, 523; message to, concerning attack on Bragg, 524; measures for relief of, II, 2, 19, 24, 27; lack of supplies at Knoxville, 26, 27; peril of, 27; J. H. Wilson and C. A. Dana work through to, 28; pursuit of Longstreet by, 32; superseded by Foster, 32, 43; declines Sherman's offer of assistance, 37; question of his restoration to duty, 48; commanding the Ninth Corps, 56, 109; at Annapolis, 56, 57; reinforced the Army of the Potomac, 65, 62, 408; assigned to defense of road south from Bull Run, 63; advances from Annapolis, 53; orders Swinton to be shot, 70; guarding the railroad at Warrenton; 93; notified of the successful crossing of the Rapidan, 99, 404; crosses the Rapidan, 107, 108; at the Wilderness, 109, 111, 113, 405; loses a colored division, 110; orders for movement, May 7, 1864, 120; ordered to support Warren, 133; crosses the Rapidan, 133; at Spotsylvania, 136, 137, 139, 131, 133, 134, 136, 137; orders to, for cooperation with Hancock, 134, 135; movement of Warren and Wright to left of. 140; ordered to draw from his intrenchments, 145; attacks on, 147; held at Spotsylvania, 147; Lee's policy to attack Wright and, 147; at Guiney's Station, 148; ordered to Jereho Bridge, 148, 149; moves to West Bethesda Church, 148; moves to the North Anna, 150, 151; movement, May 27, 1864, 156; on the Pamunkey, 157, 158; position, May 30, 1864, 158, 161; attack on, June 1, 1864, 164; movement to Bethesda Church, 165; attack on, June 2, 1864, 165; failure to follow up advantage, 165; orders for June 3, 1864, 165; in battle of Cold Harbor, 167; opinion of the situation at Cold Harbor, 165; movement, June 4, 1864, 177; crosses the Chickahominy, 181, 182; in investment of Petersburg, 191, 194, 195-203; his division commands at Petersburg, 202; his commands, 382; military and personal characteristics, 383; at crossing of the Rappahannock and the Alexandria railroad, 404; remarkable march of his troops, 405

Burnsville, Miss., operations at, I, 273, 338, 340, 341, 342

Burns, H., II, 110

Butler, B. F., commanding the Army of the James, II, 55; reinforced by Gillmore, 58, 62, 406; strength on the James, 58, 62; to operate on the James, June 17, 1864, 62, 406; to move on Richmond via the James River, 59, 62; movements against Petersburg, 59, 145, 410; visits to, 60, 185, 186, 404; to seize City Point, 63, 402, cooperation with Meade, 63, 401, 402, 405; moves up the James, 65, 66, 73, 406; embarks at Fort Monroe, 73; seizes City Point and Bermuda Hundred, 73, 119, 406; his movement, 73, 402; neglects Peter- burg, 73; sends cavalry against the Weldon railroad, 73, 133, 406; operations at Drury's Bluff, 73, 74, 140, 142, 144, 407; reduction of his force, 74; his position likened to a "bottle," 74-76, 407, 408; his services in the war, 76; Sheridan ordered to draw supplies from, 77; Sheridan communicates with, 78, 79, 406; according to programme of spring campaign, 106; fears that Lee would crush, 119, 171, 175; cooperation of W. F. Smith's (5th) corps with, 154, 176, 179, 185, 186, 402; reinforcements from, at Cold Harbor, 163; inquiries about his position, 178; Abercombie ordered to send troops to, 178; letter to, June 11, 1864, 178; reinforcements for, 178; Battle of the Wilderness, 199, 406; moves according movement on Petersburg, 179; directed to provide for crossing of the army at City Point, 173, 185; sinks stone boats in the James, 182, 185; movement against Petersburg, 186, 413; informed as to Hancock's movements, 186; bridges the James at Deep Bottom, 190, 414; warned to expect attack from Lee, 199; failure of movement on north side of the James, 225, 422; defeat of, Oct. 13, 1864, 225, 422; operations against Fort Fisher, 249, 269, 267, 435-437; return to Fort Monroe, 267; Adm. Porter's bitter complaints of, 267; on the Confederate army, 222; instructions to, for spring campaign, 1864, 401; proposed investment of Rich- mond by, 402; importance of his suc- ceeding in movement against Richmond, 403; sends cavalry to West Point, 406; reenforces toward the Petersburg and Richmond railroad, 406; sums up his opera- tions, 406, 407; forces the Chickahominy, 406, 407; telegram to Stanton, May 9, 1864, 406, 407; engagement with Hill, 407; forced back, 414; threatens Richmond, 120; letter to, Dec. 6, 1864, 435, 456; superseded by Ord, 439

Butler, M. C., II, 102

Butler, W. O., at Monterey, I, *80, 82, 85; suc- ceeds Gen. Scott, 135

Buzzard's Roost, Ga., operations against Johnston at, II, 423, 425

Cahawba River, Wilson destroys bridge over, II, 459

Cairo, Ill., Grant's headquarters at, I, 211, 213; orders to Franklin from, 214: ex- changing prisoners at, 216, 317; movement against Belmont from, 219; return to, 227; meetings with rebel officers at, 230; prom- ises to follow up the D. H. Hill-trick of Donelson at, 233; rally at, 233, 236; provision- ing Fort Donelson prisoners at, 258; Nelson sends troops to, 262; Gen. Cullum at, 267; tele- graphs to, 269; Halleck and Smithland, 268; holding the Missis- sippi at, 322; Grant ordered to, 489, 490; Adm. Porter at, 498

California, negotiations for cession of, I, 115; purchase 131; flush times in, 150-161; the journey to, in 1852, 160; gambling in, 161, 165, 166

Camargo, Mex., arrival of troops at, I, 76, 77, 79

Cameron, Ark., Steele at, II, 437

Campbell, J. A., Confederate Assistant Secre- tary of War, II, 287; Peace Commiss-ioner, 287

Camp Jackson, Mo., seizure of, I, 187-190; ex- change of prisoners from, 216, 217

Camp Salubrity, I, 31, 32, 54

Canby, E. R. S., Buell declines to serve under, II, 50; succeeds Banks in command, 81, 142; commanding Department of the Gulf, 81; proposed movement on Savannah, 213; hampered by Price's movements, 232; strength, 374; reinforced by Thomas, 274, 279, 443; ordered to move against Mobile, Montgomery, and Selma, 274, 277, 278, 444; to campaign in the interior from the Gulf, 275; com- manding at New Orleans, 277; movement from Mobile Bay, II, 278, 367, 442, 444, 446, 448; dilatoriness of, 278-280, 366; letter from Grant to, 279, 280; asks the War De- partment to assign Granger to command, 279; advised not to put Granger in command, 279; urged to destroy railroads, 294; military character, 372; killed in the Lava Beds, 372; commanding Military Division of the West Mississippi, 427; orders A. J. Smith to disperse rebels on the Mississippi, 437; sends Granger to cooperate with Farragut at Mobile, 427; ordered to reinforce the armies before Richmond, 437; proposal to reinforce, 329; proposal that he hold the Mississippi River, 429; proposal that he get Columbus, Ga., 429; expeditions from Baton Rouge and New Orleans, 431; A. J. Smith ordered to report to, 430; informed of Wilson's operations, 459; Taylor and Kirby Smith surrender to, 459
Cane River, battle of, II, 423
Carr, A. C., Miss., the enemy's strength at, I, 449; Osbourn's operations near, II, 431
Cape Fear River, defenses of the, II, 261, 264; operations on, 260, 281, 435, 437, 441, 442; difficulty of blockading, 439; in Union control, 439
Cape Girardeau, Mo., headquarters at, I, 211; meeting Gen. Prentiss at, 212
Capron, Horace, reports Stonemason lost, II, 290
Carlin, W. P., reports to Hooker at Lookout Mountain, II, 116, II, 117
"Carondelet," the, at Fort Donelson, I, 246; using the batteries at Vicksburg, 356
Carr, E. A., at battle of Port Gibson, I, 403; advances to Bolton, 426; at Champion's Hill, 425, 493; at Edward's Station, 438; in battle of Black River Bridge, 438, 439
Carroll, Samuel S., his command, II, 97; wounded in the Wilderness, 108; in battle of the Wilderness, 108, 114; recommended for brigadier-generalship, U. S. Vols., 139
Carrollton, La., Grant reviews Bank's army at, I, 487
Carroll, Sumner, II, 100
Carson, S., at Port Hudson, 370
Casey, Silas, at Chapultepec, I, 129
Casey, T. L., report on the powder-boat at Fort Fisher, II, 263
Cassville, Ga., pursuit of Johnston to, II, 423
Catharpin, Va., operations at, II, 115, 123
Catharpin road, movements on the, II, 110, 114, 127
Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, organization of, II, 99
Cedar Creek, movements, engagements, etc., II, 114, 222, 223, 403, 411, 420
Cedartown, Ga., Hood's movement by, II, 430
Cerralvo, Mex., Taylor's troops at, I, 79
Cerro Gordo, Mex., battle of, I, 99-102
Chaffin's Bluff (Farm), Va., Ord's action at, II, 218, 421
Chagres River, travel on the, I, 154, 155
Chalcó, Lake, I, 168, 169
Chamberlain, J. L., wounded before Petersburg, and commissioned brigadier-general, II, 189
Chambersburg, Pa., battle of, II, 54; McPherson's defeat at, 201, 292, 417
Chambersburg, Va., Stoneman at, II, 458
Chambless, J. R., II, 102
Champion's Hill, Miss., topography, I, 426, 435; battle of, 426, 428, 433, 442, 447, II, 179
Chancellorsville, Va., movements and incidents at, II, 101, 103, 111, 129
Chandler, Zachariah, I, 103
Chapman, George H., II, 99
Chapultepec, site of, I, 116, 119, 120; Mexican celebration of its capture, 131
Charles City Court House, Va., movements at, II, 182, 416
Charleston, S.C., firing on Fort Sumter from, I, 139; Sherman plans seizure of points near, II, 272; Sherman proposes to threaten, 276, 429, 430; the hothead of secession, 276; threatening, 277; its defensive position, 277; Sherman passes by, 285, 443; at A. V. Cameron, 444; Foster's expedition to destroy railroad between Savannah and, 431
Charleston, W. Va., expedition against, Virginia, Tenn., Tennessee railroad from, II, 58, 61, 403; meeting of Sheridan and Grant at, 214, 315, 419
Charlotte, N. C., movements near, II, 444, 485
Charlottesville, Va., Sheridan's operations at, II, 77, 170, 221, 293, 294, 445; Hunter's operations at, 152, 176, 411, 413; proposed junction of Sheridan and Hunter at, 192, 194, 410; necessity of breaking railroad communications at, 409
Chattahoochee River, the, Johnston retreats across, I, 87, 433; Sherman gains possession of, 87, 423, 424; Sherman proposes taking, 231, 430
Chattanooga, Tenn., possibilities of early capture of, I, 361, 318, 333; abandoned by Johnston, I, 343; Confederate troops in, 502, 503; possibilities of avoiding the battle of, 318; boundary of Halleck's district, 326; Bragg's movement toward, 329, 332; Buell's march to, 322, 359; orders for the relief of, 487; Rosecrans driven into, 487, 488, 494; C. A. Dana at, 491, II, 28; scheme to capture, I, 492; Bragg's possession of roads into, 455; strategic importance, 455; lack of supplies at, 455, 456, 503; to be held at all hazards, 497; desperate condition, 497; Grant at, 499, II, 26, 42; building steamboats at, I, 499, II, 19, 34; personal inspection of the situation at, I, 501; the enemy's view of the garrison at, 501, 507; topography, 502; the Army of the Cumberland besieged in, 506; securing the bridge at, 506; opening a line of supplies for, 506, 507; the pocket-line at, 506, 510; importance of expelling the enemy from the neighborhood of, 515; lack of draught animals at, 515, 516; meeting between Grant and Sherman at, 518; Grant's orders for battle, 518, 519; plan of Thomas's assault at, 520; Hooker's route to, 521; plans of the battle, 522; Sherman's trip to Bridgeport from, 524; Bragg advises withdrawal of non-combatants from, II, 1; battle of, 12 at seq.; the tunnel at, 13; Sherman's and Wood's charge at, 15, 16; troops participating in battle, 19; consideration of the victory, 19; Lincoln's misgiving at, 20, 29, 30; the battle fought as planned, 23; secured to the National troops, 24, 53; Sherman's arduous services at, 27; numbers engaged at, 29; Union and Confederate losses, 29, 31; communication between Bridgeport and, 29; importance of the victory, 30; perilous situation of the Union army, 30; Thomas in command at, 22, 85-86; Grant's trip to, 236; trip from Nashville to, 34; Sherman at, 54, 57; plans for Sherman's advance from, 58, 61; the Army of the Cumberland at, 497; Shutes supplies at, 82, 83; Sherman sends troops to, 232, 431; Thomas ordered back to Nashville and, 233; Sherman proposes to garrison, 237; reinforced, 238; Sherman authorized to give up the railroad from Atlanta to, 238.
Logan Sherman i,o arrangements . . dismounted 363; Confederate birth attack Kautz "sur- 17; 42 Shei-man 443, plan "Smith's Thomas position, 382; Chesterfield, Chicago, Chewalla, Chesterfield Chickamauga Chickasaw, Childs, Cholera, Chillicothe, Christ, Chords, Thomas, in battle of Palo Alto, I, *68 Chillictoie, Mo., threatened by Price, I, 208; Grant ordered to secure cash from banks by 188. Chillictoie, O., early visit to, I, 9 Cholera, outbreak on the 1sthmsus, 1, 156, 157 Church, Benjamin C., II, 109 Christian Association, at Vicksburg, I, 452 Christiansburg, W. Va., Aveller's operations at, II, 411 Chula, Va., Kautz's raid at, II, 407 Church, slavery supported in the, I, 17; treason in the, I, 17; "deception" of a, in Memphis, 224 Church, Prof., favors Grant's seeking a mathematical professorship, I, 30 Churubusco, Mex., battle of, I, 109, 112 Cigars, sale of, in Mex. Cincinnati, O., visits to, I, 9, 24; failure to meet McClellan at, 193; trip from Nash- ville to, II, 48; Grant leaves Sherman in, 81; transporting Schofield's command to Annapolis from, 274 Cipher despatches, trouble concerning, II, 35-37 Citico Creek, II, 2, 3, 7 City Point, Va., Butler to seize, II, 62, 402; Butler captures, 73, 119, 406; pontoons ordered to, 153; Abercrombie to move to, 177, 178; Hallock ordered to send rein- forcements to, 178; arrangements for the army to get below, 179, 180; F. W. Smith (18th Corps) sent to, via White House, 180, 181, 185, 186, 410; Smith's action between Peters burg and, 186; Sheridan sends pris- oners to, 193; Grant to, 215, 357, 419; Logan visits Grant at, 253; arrival of the Peace Commissioners at, 247; Meade at, cut off from communica- tion with his headquar- ters, 297; the Engineer Brigade to remain at, 299; Sheridan reaches, 406; the President at, 289, 290, 308, 310, 317, 320; meeting of declaration of, and Lincoln at, 1; Grant arrives at, 406; the Sixth Corps ordered to, 418; interruption of communication be- tween Washington and, 417; Grant leaves for Montgomery, 417; Grant leaves, on visit to Sheridan at Charleston, 419; Schofield to draw upon, for supplies, 440; Sherman ordered to go by water to, 440; dismounted cavalry sent to, 447; Parke commanding at, 447; Sherman visits Grant at, 449. City Point and Petersburg railroad, construc- tion of branch between the Weldon railroad and, II, 428 Chilcote Ranch, Va., Miles meets the en-emy at, II, 392 Clarke, Newman S., at San Antonio, I, *111; at Churubusco, 112 Chillicothe, Tenn., proposal to take, I, 562; Confederate evacuation of, 262; visit to C. F. Smith at, 263, 264; capture of, 304; garrisoned by Union troops, 317, 327; surren-der of, 331 Clay, Henry, Jesse R. Grant's admiration for, I, 5 Cleburne, P. R., rear-guard for Bragg's re- treat, II, 417; attack on, at Elkton, 26 Clermont County, O., Jesse R. Grant set- tles in Point Pleasant, I, 4; the Simpson family in, 7; birth of U. S. Grant in, 7; Jesse R. Grant removes to Bethel, 21 Cleveland, Tenn., movements in, I, 17, 415, 417, 513, 518, 525, 22 Flifton, Tenn., Forrest moves toward, II, 430, 431 Clinton, the river, II, 34 Clinton, Miss., movements at, I, 419, 420, 427; Grant goes to, 427 Coalfield, Va., Kautz's raid at, II, 407 Colfax, William, Vice President, C. S. A., surren-ders at Macon, II, 459 Cobb's Hill, Va., II, 451 Coehorns, use of wooden, at Vicksburg, I, 452
Cold Harbor, Va., Swinton sentenced to be shot at, II, 70; march from the North Anna to, 80; Sheridan's movements at, 159, 161, 465; Lee's position near, 161; pursuit of the enemy toward, 161; importance of, 162; advance on, 162-166; close proximity of the lines at, 163, 166; assault ordered for the 3d; Jones, 166; battle of, 170-171; regrets for the last assault at, 171, 172; Warren withdraws to, 177; Union losses at battle of, 183; W. P. Smith sent to City Point from, 185, 186; disproportion of Union and Confederate losses at, 409; effect of the battle on the enemy, 410; movement from, 410

Coldwater River, I, 375

Cole's Ferry, Va., Ferrero crosses the Chickahominy at, II, 181

Cole's Landing, Va., movement of troops to, II, 178, 180

Colonies, the confederation of the, I, 174

Colorado River, Tex., early settlements on the, I, 48, 49

Colored troops, behavior at Milliken's Bend, letter from, of, at Fort Pillow, II, 53, 64, 423; Forrest's opinion of, 64; Burnside loses a division of, 110; at the Petersburg mine, 292; suggested for holding the Rio Grande, 320; ordered to an expedition on the Peninsula, 407; First Regiment, Alabama, 425; 3d U. S. Colored Cavalry, 431

Columbia, S. C., Sherman's march on, II, 277, 294, 431; Stoneman ordered toward, 281, 442; Hampton abandons, 282; Sherman enters, 282, 411; burning of, 282, 283; Sherman provides for the inhabitants of, 283; valuable property stored in, 286, 284; evacuation of, 288; Sherman marches to Cher- raw from, 284

Columbia, Tenn., Buell's advance at, I, 274; Schofield falls back to, II, 254; skirmish at, 254; pursuit of Hood to, 269; Forrest appears before, 428

Columbia, Va., Sheridan at, II, 294, 445

Columbia River, ordered to the, I, 161; Hudson Bay Company's posts on, 162; over- flow of the, 162; mortality among Indians on the, 163, 164

Columbus, Ala., capture of, II, 439

Columbus, Ga., proposed movements against, II, 231, 429

Columbus, Ky., troops sent from, to capture Paducah, I, 214; in Confederate possession, 216; fortifications, 215, 253; Grant's desire to capture, 215; reported movement of enemy from, 219; C. F. Smith ordered against, 219; strength, 220; meetings with rebel officers at, 290; the Confederate line at, 232, 265; hindering reinforcements to Buckner from, 233; capture of, 294; repairing, holding, etc., railroads from, 317, 336-338, 352; meeting with Sherman at, 355; Forrest's raid near, 309; abandoned as a base, 361; garrison at, 368; Grant reports to Stanton from, 489; Buford makes an unsuccessful attempt to capture, II, 425

Columbus, Miss., Hatcher destroys the railroad between Macon and, I, 498

Comstock, C. B., engineering work at Vicks- burg, I, *450; entrusted with the cipher code, II, 33; saves Grant and Meade from capture at, 154; unhurt by the explosion at, 156; burned, 176, 180; chief engineer in Fort Fish- er expedition, 438

Confederate Army, mode of estimating its strength, I, 392; II, 183, 184; organization of, 101-104; desertsions from, and demoral- ization of, 306, 309, 335, 334, 335, 350, 351; Butler on the, 292. See also ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA; Lee, R. E. "Conestoga," the action on the Tennessee, 46, 129, 130, 131

Confederate States of America, preliminary Congress of, I, 180; organization of government, 181; the capital at Montgomery, 181; disclaimer of the Constitution of the United States, 183; military advantages compared with the North, 250, 470, II, 397, 399; depression in, over fall of Fort Donelson, I, 289; lack of enthusiasm in the South-west, 261; examples of patriotism in, 320, 321, 323-325; com mission of debts due to Northern creditors, 325; northern advance of the armies of, 336; foreign powers and the, 481; the press in, II, 31, 54; claim victories from the North, 54; importance of the Shenandoah Valley to, 291, 295, 297, 299, 314, 220; importance of Wilmington to, 261; mission of the Peace Commission sent from, 257-259; Grant refuses to recognize the government of, 283; importance of the capital to, 291, 319, 320; hopelessness of the cause after the Union army took the Petersburg works, 322; morale of the armies of, 410; cutting the Confederacy in two, 430, 431. See also SOUTH

Congress. See UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Connecticut, the Grants in, I, 1, 5, 6

Conner, David, visit to General Taylor, I, 74, 75

Conquest, a policy of, I, 301

Conscription, resort to, in the North, I, 454; in the South, II, 292, 332; 308, 329

Constitution. See UNITED STATES CONSTITU- TION

Consumption, in the Grant family, I, 23; Grant lives from fears of, 36; death of S. S. Grant from, 172

Contraband of war, what considered, 304

Contreras, Mex., battle of, I, 160-161; Gen. Pierce injured at, 113, 114

Cooke, John R., II, 102

Cooper, J. F., Grant's fondness for works of, I, 28

Coosa River, Hood on the, II, 429, 430

Coosawhatchie River, Foster on the, II, 432

Corbin's Bridge, Va., Greig and Wilson's action at, II, 109; sheridan orders cavalry to occupy, 127; Early crosses, 127

Cordova, Mex., I, 38

Corinth, Miss., possibility of capture after the fall of Donelson, I, 261; importance of, 372, 300, 315; railroad communication with Jackson, 272; Confederate position at, 272, 273, 312, 314; contemplated advance on, 274; A. S. Johnston advances from, 275, 288; Johnston fortifies at, 294; Union advance on, 308, 312; topography, 569; delays in capturing, 310; strengthening the troops at, 310; investment of, 313, 314; Confederate evacuation of, 314, 315; Beauregard's device of cheeing at, 315; Union occupation of, 315; the trophies of war at, 315; needless precaution in advancing on, 316; fortified by Halleck, 316; deception of Halleck's army at, 317, 327; lost opportunities after its capture, 317, 318; repairing railroad from Columbus to,
INDEX

317; Grant's ammunitions position at, 319; deserted by its inhabitants, 323; Grant recalled from Memphis to, 325, 326, re-forhitng, 327; threatened by Van Dorn, 333; minor battles in vicinity of, 328; communication with Columbus, 328; meeting Sheridan at, 333; troops at, 353; advance of Northern troops. Prior on, 336; provisions for reinforcing, 336-338; the enemy's determination to attack, 345; battle of, 345-349; value of the fortifications of, 336; danger of rebel capture of, 346; heavy losses at, 336, 346; results of the battle, 349; Grant's strength at, 349; movement on Grand Junction from, 352; holding Memphis and Charleston railroad at, 352;
Sherman starts from Memphis for, 341;
Forrest escapes to, 428

Corporal punishment in Ohio schools, 1, 13
Corpus Christi, the Fourth Infantry arrives at, 19; a battle in the bay, 40, 41; the Mexican town of, at, 41; assembling of the army of occupation, 41; military life at, 47; trip to San Antonio from, 37-53; preparations for an advance from, 54; break-ning mules at, 54-57; advance of the army of invasion from, 59; review at, 73

Cortese, John M., in battle of Chattanoogi,
15, 13; defense of Alabatoma, 297

Cortez, M. D., II, 101
Cortez, Hernan, road built by, at Cerro
Gordo, I, 100
Cervin, Thomas, attitude toward the Mexican war, I, 45

Cottage Hill, Miss., Sherman at, I, 336
Cotton, demoralization of the troops by the trade in, I, 351, 352; working plantations for military benefit, 351; export of, from Wilmington, II, 355

Cotton-gin, its influence on slavery, 1, 179

Courtland, Ala., Hood retreats toward, II, 382

Covington, Ky., visit to parents at, I, 193; plan of Ord's operations near, II, 61

Cox's Bridge, N. C., Sherman at, II, 442

a "gopher line," establishing the, I, 403-506,
II, 26

Craig's Meeting-House, Va., II, 106

Crawford, Samuel W., his command, II, 38;
at anchor, I, 128; attack on Spottsylvania, 128; sent to Tyler's assistance, 143; at Jericho Ford, 149; junction with Crittenden, 150;
in battle of Five Forks, 305, 306

Criminal classes, dangers of the North and South, II, 215

Critics, a word about, I, 128

Crittenden, George, on excursion in Mexi, I, 112 et seq.

Critterden, T. L., at Shiloh, I, 287, 288; retreats to Chattanooga, 494; question of his restoration to duty, II, 48; junction with Crawford and Warren, 190; crosses the North Anna, 150; engagement with Hill, 150

Crocker, Marcellus M., promoted, brigadier-general, I, 250; at Brunsxun, 149; at Fort Gibson, in battle of Raymond, 415; as a commander, 416, 480; death of, 416;
at battle of Jackson, 421-423; near Bolton,
426; in battle of Champion's Hill, 432-435

Crook, George, commanding in West Virinia, I, 258, 496-511; operations against the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, 58, 59, 61; 73, 74; moves according to programme of spring campaign, 106; junction with Averell, 181, 411; Hunter's junction with, 192, 193, 412; driven from Winchester by Early, 201; sent out between Burkes-vile, 201; moves west of Farmville, 332; to take Lewisburg, 163

Cross, Trueman, killed by Mexicans, I, 61

Crucous, transportation at, I, 153, 155

Cruzen, J. W., movement of his division along Lookout Creek, II, 8; in battle of Lookout Mountain, 8, 9; awaiting under Hooker at Chattanooga, 29

Crichton's Landing, Tenn., operations at, I, 321, 323, 327, 329, 390

Cuba, Mex., visit to, I, 115; arrested in, 446

Cuyahoga, Mex., occupation of, I, 133; visit at, 146, 147

Culham, G. W., congratulates Grant on capture of Fort Donelson, I, 261; chief of staff at Cairo, 267; Grant reports to, 267

Culverp Court House, Va., Grant's headquarters at, II, 56, 57, 66; Grant leaves for the front, 165; troops ordered to Washington via, 200; Grant's advance to fight Lee between Richmond and, 201

Cumberland M., I, 321-367

Cumberland Gap, I, 311, 324, 341

Cumberland River, the, I, 215, 292-294, 242-244, 246, 251, 226, 255, 294, 376, 501, II, 256, 428, 431

Curtis, N. M., in expedition against Fort Curtsinger, L. J., put under Sherman's com-mmand, I, 357; commanding department of Kansas, II, 427

Cushing, Calvin, member of court of inquiry in Custer's case, I, 135

Custer, G. A., his command, II, 99; drives the enemy from Carthup Furnace to Todd's Tavern, 115; action at Hawkes's
Shop, 138; movement against Hampton, 139; in battle of Cedar Creek, 223; commanding cavalry division with Sherman,
294; ordered south of Appomattox
Station, 235; engagement at Appomattox
Station, 395

Cutler, Lysander, his command, II, 98, attacks Anderson at Spottsylvania, 183; success to command of, II, 121; his division transferred to Wright's corps, 138; at Jericho Ford, 149; driven back by Hill, 149

Cynthia, Ky., Morgan captures, II, 235

Dabney's Mills, Va., interview with Sheridan at, II, 301, 302; Grant's headquarters at, 310; Humphreys at, 41

Dabney, J. A., commanding on the South-Carolina and Georgia coasts, II, 273; to seize points near Charleston, 273

Dallas, Ga., operations at and near, II, 86, 424, 429

Dalton, Ga., plan for operations between Cleveland and, I, 517, 548; Bragg's retreat through, II, 21; operations against railroads at, 21, 92, 430; Thomas ordered to capture, 21; Johnston confronting Sheridan at, 48, 57, 122; Johnston's position at, 84, 399; Schofield's movement from Knoxville to, 416; McPherson's movement from Huntsville to, 86, 87, 84; strength of, 84; abandoned by Johnston, 85; Wheeler cuts railroad between Resaca and, 92; Sherman drives Johnston out of, 140; repulse of Wheeler at, 274
Dana, Charles A., in the Vicksburg campaign, I, *406; sent to Rosecrans's head-quarter, 488; in Chattanooga, 491; communication, II, 491, 492; despatches from, 492; at Chattanooga during the battle, II, 28; accompanies Wilson from Chattanooga to Knoxville, 28

Daniel, J., II, 19

Danville, Miss., troops at, I, 333

Danville, Va., movements at and near, II, 322, 323, 377, 441, 453, 454, 458

Danville road, movements on and against the, II, 140, 251, 293, 301, 316, 322, 325, 405, 447, 449, 450, 453; Lee's avenue of escape, 291, 296, 303, 304, 315, 316

Darby road, the, Kautz's movement on, II, 218; Butler's mistake on, 225

Davies, H. E., Jr., his command, II, 99; captures at Paintsville, *324, 325, 447

Davies, T. A., I, 335

Davis, Jefferson, on the threatened war, I, *178; head of the Southern rebellion, 181; visit to Bragg, 507, II, 20, 21; letter to A. S. Johnston, I, 297; exalted opinion of his own military talents, II, 22; disappointed at Lincoln's policy, 227; appoints Hood to succeed Johnston, 227; denounces Gov. Brown and Gen. Johnston, 228; speeches at Palmetto and Macon, 227-230, 428, 429; appointment of people of Georgia, 238, 239; views of Sherman's position, 228-230, 429; plan of operations in Kentucky and Tennessee, 233, 238; feeling between Johnston and, 235, 236; agrees with Lee to abandon Richmond and Petersburg, 296; abandonment of Richmond, 316; capture of, 369, 370, 371, 439; feelings of Grant and Lincoln toward, 368, 369; question of his capture in female attire, 370, 371

Davis, Jefferson C., relieves Grant at Jefferson City, I, *210; position, Nov. 24, 1863, II, 11; ordered to Chickamauga Station, 18; serving under Sherman at Chattanooga, 20; commanding the Fourteenth Corps, 234; captures Rome, 423

Davis, Joseph R., II, 102

Davis, Mills, Miss., pursuing the enemy to, I, 345

Decatur, Ala., troops sent to Buell via, I, 339; rebuilding railroad from Nashville to, 515-517; Sherman ordered to send troops to, II, 29; plan for McPherson to cross the Tennessee at, 83; operations between Atlanta and, 90; Sherman's line at, 93; garrisoned by Thomas, 238; Hood's camps near, 293; Thomas abandons, 234, 236; Rousseau reinforces Sherman at, 241; Hood's base at, 429; Hood fails to capture, 432

Decatur, Miss., Sherman's narrow escape at, II, 41

Dechard, Tenn., Forrest cuts the railroad at, II, 429

Deep Bottom, Va., Butler bridges the James at, II, 199, 414; movements of troops at, 199, 201; extent of the Union lines from, 231, 415; Merritt strikes the enemy at, 322; action, July 28, 1863, 415

Deer Creek, Adj. Porter's explorations on, I, 377

Deerfield, O., the Grants in, I, 3

Delano, Susannah, I, 2

Detwiler, represented in Confederate Congress, I, 186; fails to pass ordinance of secession, 189

DeLoche, —, hospitality of, I, 321-323

Democratic Convention of 1864, declares the war a failure, II, 217

Democratic Party, the Simpsons and the, I, 6

Demopolis, Ala., Polk retreats toward, II, 41

Denison, Andrew W., II, 98

Dennis, Elias S., defeats a force near Medomak, I, 332

Dent, Ellen, I, 26

Dent, Emma, I, 26

Dent, Frederick T., early friendship with, I, 26; sent to make transportation arrangements for the Eighteenth Corps, II, 178, 179

Dent, Julia, early friendship and affection for, I, 28, 29, 30; engaged to, 29, 30; married to, 153

Department of Arkansas, embraced in Sherman's command, II, 399. See also DEPARTMENT OF THE TRANS-MISSISSIPPI

Department of Kansas, S. R. Curtis commanding in, II, 427

Department of North Carolina, Schofield assigned to, II, 428

Department of the Cumberland, merged in the Military Division of the Mississippi, I, 491, II, 81; Thomas commanding, 81

Department of West Virginia, expedition from, II, 53; necessity of a supreme commander in, 417; merged in the Middle Military Division, 419

De Shroon's, La., I, 400

"De Soto," the, Ellet loses the, I, 387

Destiny, man's inability to control, I, 76

Destruction of rebel property, policy of, I, 304, 305
Detroit, Mich., in garrison at, I, 133; Zachariah Chandler elected mayor, 153
Devens, Charles, in battle of Cold Harbor, II, 161
Devon, T. C., his command, II, 59, 291 "Diana," steamer, at Nashville, I, 261
Dinwiddie Court House, Va., movements at and near, II, 393-395, 447, 456, 451
Discipline, lack of, among troops, I, 292
Dismounted Rifles, the, I, 27
District of Cairo, I, 233
District of West Tennessee, Grant in command of, I, 295
Dix, Exevin a, I, 173
Dix, Roger S., I, *50
Dodge, G. M., ordered to rebuild the railroad between Nashville and Decatur, I, *513; skill in railroad building, 313-315; providing food and forage for his army, 514; report of battle of Atlanta, II, 89; recommended for promotion, 133; wounded, leaves the army, 294
Doles, George, his command, I, 101; capture of his division, 138
Donaldson, J. L., commanding organization at Nashville, II, 239
Dorchester, Eng., Matthew Grant emigrates from, I, 2
Dorchester, Mass., settlement of Matthew Grant at, I Douglas, Stephen A., Grant's party affiliations with, I, *172; acquaintance with, 191; debates with Lincoln, II, 50
Dover, Tenn., operations and incidents at, I, 245, 248, 256, 277
Draft, the, recourse to, I, 369, 481; resistance to, II, 210
Draper, Simeon, in charge of abandoned slave institution at Savannah, II, 271
Drury's Bluff, Va., operations at, II, 73, 74, 110, 142, 144, 188, 407
Dublin, W. V., destruction of the Virginia and Tennessee railway at, II, 110
Duckport, La., canal project, I, 380, 381; Sherman's troops at, 392
Duck River, Hood destroys bridges over, II, 293
Duellng, views on, I, 37
Duguidsville, Va., Sheridan's operations at, II, 445
Duncan, James, placed under arrest, I, *134; hostility to Gen. Scott, 134, 185; released from arrest, 135
Dunn, William M., sent to Cairo with dispatches, I, 474; sent with letters to Sherman at Savannah, II, 249
Dunovant, J., II, 192
Dutch Gap, Va., depot for exchange of prisoners at, I, 469
Eagle Bend, I, 377, 378
Early, Jubal A. his command, II, 101; in the Wilderness, *711; admission concerning the battle, I, 135; succeeds to command of Hill's corps, *724; follows Army of the Potomac, 121; crosses the Po, 127; confronts Hancock, 198; attacks Union right, 143; attacks Warren at Hantley Corners, 158; repulsed, 193; sent to the Valley, 184; moves against Hunter, 195; movement against Washington, 195-197, 417; retreat to Strasburg, 204; drives Creek from Winchester, 204; Wright's pursuit of, 294, 417; instructions to commanders operating against, 206; strength, 208; confronts Sheridan in the Valley, 208; compared with Sheridan, 208; reinforcements for, 209, 213, 230, 430, 421; fears of another attempt to capture Washington by, 215; plan to have Sheridan attack, 214; attempts to destroy the railroad at Martinsburg, 216; defeated at Opequon Creek, 216, 429; had generalship, 216; retreats to Fisher's Hill, 216; forces of reinforcements for, 218; prepares to strike Sheridan at Harrisonburg, 220; pursues Sheridan, 221; defeated at Fisher's Hill, 221, 420; intention to crush Sheridan, 222; intrenches, 222; in battle of Cedar Creek, 222, 223, 430; defeated by Sheridan, 224, 430; losses in the Valley, 224; defeated by Sheridan between Staunton and Charlottesville, 229; retreats, 389; moves to Strasburg, 429; defeated by Sheridan at Waynesboro, 445
East and West, possibility of kickings between, I, 315, 329; lack of concert between, 397; the armory of the, compared, 460
East Chickamauga Creek, II, 26
East Tennessee and Virginia railroad, expeditions against the, II, 463, 471
Easton, A., the, reorganizes near Liberator, I, *334
Ebenezer Church, Ala., Wilson defeats Forrest near, II, 458
Edgfield, Tenn., Buell at, I, 263
Edgewood, lack of efficient facilities in the, I, 4, 5; U. S. Grant's early, 8, 11, 13
Edward's Station, Miss., operations at and near, I, 315, 439, 434, 427, 428, 431, 477
Egan, T. L., carries bridge over the North Anna, I, 228
Egypt, Miss., Grierson's raid at, II, 434
Eighteenth Army-corp, in battle of Cold Harbor, II, 167; strength, 168; Meade's command, 201; in Petersburg mine affair, 201; threatening movement against Richmond, 218, 219; Weyzell assigned to command, 219; relieved by the Second Corps, 415; captures Fort Harrison, 421
Eighth U. S. Infantry, at Corpus Christi, I, 373
Electricity, changes wrought by the application of, I, 176
Elections, of 1836, I, 150, 171; of 1850, 171-173; of 1862, 481; of 1864, II, 34, 234
Eleventh Army-corps, I, 298
Elkins' Ferry, Ark., junction of Steele and Tackner at, II, 429
Elk River, Sherman detained at, I, 377
Ellet, Charles R., commanding the Marine Brigade, I, 387; runs batteries at Grand Gulf, 387; action on Red River, 387
Ely's Ford, Va., I, 98, 116, 404
Emory, W. H., commanding Nineteenth Corps, II, *197; in Washington, 199; in battle of Cedar Creek, 283
Engineer Brigade, the, II, 182, 229
Engineer Corps, at Cerro Gordo, I, 100, 101; at San Antonio, 119, 111; at Charnubres, 113
England, attitude on the blockade, II, 388; share in the Mexican imperial scheme, 391; attitude toward the United States in the war, 391, 392; the true relations between the United States and, 391, 392; treatment of her colonies, 392
"Essex," the gunboat, in capture of Fort Henry, I, 236, 237, 239; narrow escape of Porter and Grant on board of, 236, 237; explosion of boiler on, 239
Etowah River, movements on the, II, 151, 423
Europe, the soldiers of, compared with those of the United States, II, 375; how the war was regarded in, 388
European troops, compared with Sherman's army after Atlanta, II, 236
Eustis, Henry L., II, 99
Ewell, Richard S., commanding at Jefferson Barracks, I, 238, character, 28; arrives near Mine Run, II, 106; ordered to attack via the Orange Turnpike, 105; position, in Union, May 9, 1864, 127; attacks the Union right, 143, 406; defeat of, 143, sent to the Valley, 151; taken prisoner, April 6, 1865, 332; views on the hopelessness of the war, 332; loses, May 12, 1864, 405
Ewing, H. B., at Trenton, I, 238, in assault on Missionary Ridge, II, 6
Executive Mansion, Grant receives his commission as lieutenant-general at the, II, 44, 45
Explosive musket-balls, use of, at Vicksburg, I, 451
Farming, Grant's early training in, I, 8, 9, 12, 13; experiment at Fort Vancouver, 161, 162; near St. Louis, 167, 168
Farmingston, Miss., Pope's engagement at, I, 138
Farmville, Va., Lee orders rations from Danville to, II, 322, 323; the Richmond and Danville railroad at, 323; Read at, 330; movement of Wright and Crook west of, 332; Ord's position between Burkeville Junction and, 332, 454; the Confederates run their trains off at, 332; Grant at, 333, 334, 454, 455; an incident of the war at, 335, 359; Sheridan's plan to destroy the South Side railroad at, 445; the Sixth Corps at, 454; Read's action at, 454
Farragut, David G., passes the batteries at Fort Hudson, I, 387; visit from, 387; operations at Mobile, II, 400, 401, 427
Fayetteville, N. C., movements at and near, II, 277, 284, 285, 441, 444
Fernandina, Fla., in Federal possession, II, 54, 398
Ferrero, Edward, his command, II, 100, 143; guarding road from Spottsylvania to Fredericksburg, 143, 144; crosses the Chickahominy, 181; in the Petersburg mine affair, 292
Fever and ague, Grant incapacitated by, I, 159
Fevres, outbreak of, before Vicksburg, I, 332
Field, C. W., II, 101
Field telegraph, the, II, 117, 118
Fifteenth Army-corps, at the Yazoo River, I, 366; left wing of the Army of the Tennessee, 390; at Bruinsburg, 401; at Champion's Hill, 428; in operations west of Chattanooga, II, 7; commanded by Gen. Logan, 234; in right wing of Sherman's army, 234
Fifth Army-corps, crosses Germanna Ford, II, 111, 114; ordered to the South Anna, 148, 406; position, May 26, 1864, 153; ordered toward Hanover, 155; instructions to Meade for movement of the, 180; to seize Long Bridge, 180; in investment of Petersburg, 191, 433; captures the Weldon railroad and the battle of White Oak Road, 259; in advance on Five Forks, 304, 452; Warren superseded by Griffin in command, 306, 452; in pursuit at Five Forks, 307; sent across the Chickahominy, 307, 422; intruded near Jetersville, 333, 454; movement via Prince Edward's Court House, 332, 454; meets the enemy at Mine Run, 404; march toward Spottsylvania Court House, 405; takes possession of the Weldon railroad, 421; to move on the Vaughn road, 450; to reinforce Sheridan, 452; in pursuit to Appomattox, 454, 456; designated to receive paroles of Lee's army, 357; see also GRIFFIN; WARREN
Fifth U. S. Infantry, at Corps Christi, I, 44
Finegan, Joseph, II, 102
First Army-corps, Army of Northern Virginia, organization of, II, 101
First Army-corps (Union), Hancock ordered to organize the, II, 226
First U. S. Dragonos, in Mexican war, I, 105
Fisher, Joseph W., II, 98
Fisher's Hill, Va., Early's retreat to, II, 216; Sheridan routs Early's cavalry at, 221, 420
Fisher's, movement of the Sixteenth Corps to, II, 458
Fitzhugh, R. H., II, 100
Five Forks, Va., movements of Humphreys and Longstreet toward, 249; plan to capture, 306, 301, 303; Sheridan's advance on, 303, 306, 451; Pickett sent to reinforce, 394; battle of, 303, 306, 307, 451, 452; Merritt at, 397; at, Grant Lee would attempt to recapture, 398
Five-Mile Creek, McMerron at, I, 413
Flag Pond Battery, captured by Curtis's brigade, II, 263
Flamingo Island, cholera hospitals on, I, 156, 157
Flat Rock, Ky., visit to, I, 10
Florence, Ala., Sherman arrives at, I, 512; consummated by Thomas, II, 238; Hood crosses the Tennessee at, 240, 432; Hood's base at, 240, 429
Florence, Tenn., gunboats at, I, 244
Florida, no claim to the right of secession, I, 171; secession of, 183; Federal holdings in, II, 54, 398
Florida, Mo., moving against Harris at, I, 290
Floyd, John B., Secretary of War, I, 181; scatters the army and war material, I, 181, 253; commanding at Fort Donelson, 241; flight from Fort Donelson, 254, 357; character, 293, 294, 297
Folly Island, S. C., Federal possession of, II, 53, 398
Foote, Andrew H., commanding gunboats on the Tennessee River, I, 235; coincides with Grant's plan of campaign, 235; in expedition against Fort Henry, 236; operations at Fort Donelson, 241, 247, 250; wounded, 243; visit to, on the flagship, 249, 250; congratulated by Halleck, 250
Forage, policy regarding, I, 304, 305; collecting, 353
Ford's Station, Va., Sheridan's movement toward Petersburg from, II, 453
Ford's Theatre, Gen. and Mrs. Grant invited to accompany the President to, II, 357
"Forest Queen," the running the batteries at Vicksburg, I, 386.

Forest, Nathan B., escape of, from Fort Donelson, I, 255, 257; raid on Grant's communications, 369; W. Sooy Smith sent against, II, 40; strength and quality of his cavalry, 41; stratagem, 41, 57, 229, 278; defeats W. Sooy Smith, 44; force in the West, 57; raid in Tennessee, 63, 228, 432; captures Fort Pillow, 63, 425; raid to Paducah, 63, 425; captures Union City, 63, 425; report of the capture of Fort Pillow, 64; opinion concerning negro soldiers, 64; defeats Sturgis, 197, 424; harasses Sherman's rear, 197; defeated by A. J. Smith, 198, 435; operations in Tennessee and Kentucky, 229, 236; capture of gunboats by, 229, 432; danger of his crossing the Cumberland, 287; operations in Mississippi, 287, 399, 424; exhausted by his success, 424; crosses the Tennessee near Waterloo, 425; skirmish at Pulaski, 425; captures garrison at Sulphur Bluff, 438; escapes to Corinth, Miss., 424; junction with Hood, 432; captures at Johnsonville, 432; surprised by Grierson at Verona, 434; Wilson's raid against, 368, 438; defeated at Schen, 369.

Fort Anderson, N. C., Union occupation of, II, 441.

Fort Blakely, Ala., carried by assault, II, 367, 458.

Fort Brown, Tex., building of, I, 63, 61; siege of, 66; relief of the garrison, 72.

Fort Caswell, N. C., blown up by the enemy, II, 259, 265, 439.

Fort de Russy, La., captured by A. J. Smith, II, 426.

Fort Donelson, Tenn., possible results of the capture of, I, 117; Confederates position at, 232; strategic value of, 233, 241; hindering reinforcements to Buckner from, 233; proposal to capture, 241; situation, 232, 233; investment of, 234; march from Fort Henry to, 241; the gunboats at, 242-250; the National line at, 248; suffering of the troops at, 245, 249; capital around, 244; visit of his feet on the flag-ship at, 249, 259; Confederate sortie at, 250-252; Confederate council of war at, 251; surrender of, 243-244; escape of prisoners at, 243; visit of his feet on the flag-ship at, 249, 259; Confederate sortie at, 250-252; Confederate council of war at, 251; surrender of, 243-244; escape of prisoners at, 243; size and garrison of, 244; Halleck's views on the capture of, 250; effect of its fall, 260-232, 303, 304; Johnston's opinion concerning, 267; orders to leave a small garrison at, 268; garrisoned by Union troops, 317, 329; under Gen. Mason's command, 330, 331; attempt of capture of, by the enemy, and repulse, 331.

Fort Fisher, N. C., proposed movement against, II, 232; Grant's disbelief in Butler's scheme, 249; expeditions against, 248-252; situation at, 261, 264; capture of English blockade-runner at, 262; strength of, 264; Gen. Whiting commanding at, 264; reinforcements from Richmond, 264, 268; extent of the works, 269, 270; captures, casualties, etc., at, 270; Secretary Stanton goes to, 270; capture of, 274, 277, 438, 439; Union force at, 274; Sherman informed of the fall of, 327; Terry's services at, 384; importance of securing, 435; Schofield sent to, 439; Grant visits, 446; Union garrison at, 441.

Fort Gaines, Ala., surrender of, II, 437; movement of the Sixteenth Corps from, 435.

Fort Gilmer, Va., Lee reinforces troops about, II, 219; Union defeat at, 421.

Fort Gregg, Va., capture of, II, 311.

Fort Harrisson, Va., capture of, II, 219, 261, 421.

Fort Heiman, Ky., operations at, and capture of, I, 232, 234, 237, 239, 266, II, 832.

Fort Henry, Tenn., location of, I, 232, 237; advantages of this position to Buell, 239; reinforcements to Buckner from, 235; steps toward its capture, 231; proposal to capture, 235; expedition against, 236-237; defenses of, 239; Confederate order to fortify, 244, 254, 379; march to Fort Donelson from, 241; effect of capture of, 232, 236, 241; Grant ordered to move back, and remain at, 267; predecessors from, 258.

Fort Holt, Ky., moving against Belmont from, I, 219; meetings with rebel officers at, 230.

Fort Humphreys, La., troops ordered to, I, 27.

Fort McAlester, Ga., capture of, II, 248, 431.

Fort Monroe, Va., in Union hands, II, 33, 354; Gilmore ordered to, 344; visits to, 344; Butler embarks at, 73; the Nineteenth Corps ordered to Washington from, 197; Butler returns to, 367; second Fort Fisher expedition sails from, 267, 307, 438; Sherman arrives at, from Savannah, 374; Butler to move from, simultaneously with Meade, 402; siege train and reinforcements sent to Terry at, 439; 20th mass movements with, 440.

Fort Morgan, Ala., surrender of, II, 127; Granger moves on Spanish Fort from, 488.

Fort Pemberton, Miss., attacks on, I, 376.

Fort Pillow, Tenn., capture of, and massacre at, II, 63, 64, 425.

Fort Powell, Ala., blown up and abandoned, II, 427.

Fort Powhatan, Va., movements at and toward, II, 430, 414.

Fort Pulaski, Ga., Federal possession of, I, 58, 3.

Fort Smith, Thayer cooperates with Steele from, II, 304, 305.

Fort Stevens, D. C., skirmish in front of, II, 318, 336.

Fort Sumter, firing on, and capture of, I, 163.

Fort Vancouver, Ore., the Fourth Infantry ordered to, I, 161; furnishing experiment at, 161, 162; Indians and Hudson Bay Company post at, 102.

Fort Whittow, Va., capture of, II, 311.

Fort Wysz, Ga., action at, II, 3, 4.

Foster, J. G., at Cerro Gordo, I, 100; succeeds Burnside, I, 63; sends to the relief of Burnside, II, 32; commanding the Department of the Ohio, 34, 43; relieved by Schofield, 43; commanding on the southern Atlantic seaboard, 43, 43; communications with Sherman, 249, 249; Savannah turned back, 439; arranges with Sherman to seize points near Charleston, 227; garrison of Charleston, 283; expedition to destroy railroad between Savannah and Charleston, 431; expedition on Broad River, 431; position between the Coosawhatchie and Palatulimy expedition, 432

Foster, R. S., assaults Fort Gregg, II, 311

Fouke, Philip B., I, 191

Forty-Mile Creek, operations at, I, 413-415, 447

Forty-Sixth Army-corps, in expedition to Brown's Ferry, I, 501; in action at Fort Wood, II, 5; in operations on the west of Chattanooga, 8; commanded by Jefferson C. Davis, 234; in left wing of Sherman's army, 334

Fourth Army-corps, sent to reinforce Thomas, II, 238, 431; sent to Pulaski to watch Hood, 274; ordered to Bull Gap, 282

Fourth U. S. Infantry, the, Grant appointed brevet second lieutenant in, I, 22; Grant reports for duty, 25; ordered to Fort Jefferson, 27; at Camp Sallibury, 31, 32, 34-36; promotion in the, 35; loss of Col. Vose, 38; leaves New Orleans for Corpus Christi, 39; at Corpus Christi, 44; Grant transferred to the Seventy Infantry from, and back to, 53, 54; Grant appointed regimental quartermaster, 57; Grant quits the army and commences support of artillery against Black Fort, 82, 83; Grant acting adjutant, 84; loses at Monterrey, 86; transferred from Twiggs's division to Gen. Worth's, 93; losses by steamer explosion, 196; Grant promoted first lieutenant, vice Sidney Smith, killed at City of Mexico, 126; replenishing the regimental fund, 141, 142; in garrison at Sackett's Harbor, 153; in garrison at Detroit, 153; ordered to the Pacific Coast, 153; embarks at New York, 153, 154; crossing the Isthmus, 154-157; outbreak of cholera, 156-157; at Benicia Barracks, 161; ordered to Fort Vancouver, 161; Grant's resignation from, 167; Sheridan's service in the, 333

Fox, G. N., calls upon Grant for men for the Fort Fisher expedition, II, 435

France, the Mexican imperial scheme of, II, 388-390; requests the withdrawal of U. S. troops from Mexico, 390; value of the Franco-Prussian war to, 390; the friend of the United States, 390

Frank, Paul, II, 97

Franklin, Tenn., strength of Schofield before the battle of, II, 534; Hood's strength before, 274; Schofield retreats to, 256; battle of, 255, 432, 433; policy of attacking after Hood's repulse at, 257; Hood takes, 260; Wheeler at, 124

Frederick City, Md., approach of the enemy to, II, 416

Fredericksburg, Va., base for the Army of the Potomac, II, 77; roads from Orange Court House to, 162; Lee's belief in Grant's retreat to, 121, 124; suspected movement toward, 127; changing base to Port Royal from, 142

Fredericksburg and Richmond road, Lee's position on the, II, 153

Fredericksburg railroad, the destruction of tracks on, II, 154; impossibility of holding, 174; necessity of protecting, 409

Freedman's Bureau, origin of the, I, 353

Freedmen. See Colored Troops; Negroes.

Free-Soil Democracy, the, I, 169

Fremont, John C., information from, I, 214; exchanges prisoners from Camp Jackson, 216; moves against Price, *218; superseded by Halleck, 231; nominated by the press as Grant's successor, 332; question of his service on duty, I, 28

French, Grant's standing in, at West Point, I, 20

Frontiersmen, II, 395

Front Royal, Va., Sheridan at, II, 222

Fugitive Slave Law the, II, 357

Fuller, J. W., in battle of Atlanta, II, 89

Fulton road, movement of troops via, I, 340, 342, 343

Furnace road, Va., Sheridan's actions on the, II, 111

Gadsden, Ala., operations at, II, 429, 431

Gaines, Edmund P., I, *30

Galena, III., Grant's removal to, I, 168; life in, 171-173; election excitement in, 172; volunteering at, 184 et seq.; its company mustered into the U. S. service, 186

Gambling, in Mexico, I, 140, 148; in California, 161, 165, 166

Garden's Battery, II, 103

Gardiner, Gen., defeated by Stoneman at Sallie, 453

Gardner, Frankin, changed from the Seventy Infantry to the Fourth, and back, I, 53, 54; surrenders Port Hudson, 474

Garland, John, institute of much colonies in Mexico, I, 76, 77; at Monterey, 84-86; at San Antonio, 109, 110; at Churubusco, 112; wounded in City of Mexico, 126

Garrard's cavalry raid by, II, *89, 424

Garrett, Robert, meeting with, II, 215

Gaston, N. C., operations near, II, 447, 449

Gates's House, Va., II, 102, 136

Gauley River, operations on the, II, 50, 72, 195

Geary, J. W., commanding division of Twelfth Corps, I, *505; at Wauhatchie, 508, II, 8; in Lookout Valley, I, 519, II, 8; in battle of Lookout Mountain, 8, 9; serving under Hooker at Chattanooga, 20

Georgetown, O., Jesse R. Grant mayor of, I, 5; the Grant family at, 7; Grant's school-days at, 11, 13; John Morgan's raid at, 17, 18; dark blue war record of, 16-18; Jesse R. Grant removes from, 21; visits to, 24

Georgetown, S. C., possibility of Sherman's falling back toward, II, 444

Georgia, secession of, I, 183; Johnston's army in, II, 48; Union holdings in, 53, 54, 398; Sherman's campaign in, 151, 231, 240, 375, 376, 390, 350, 413, 431; Lee's desires to send troops to, 199; Pyes, Davis's appeal to the people of, 258, 259; withdrawal of State troops from Hood, 229; Beauregard's appeal to citizens of, 239; destroying the railroads in, 241, 242; living on the country in, 241-244; capture of the archives of, 244; the State militia opposed to Sherman, 245; views of the Southern press on Sherman's march through, 245; adding cadets and convicts to the militia, 245; the mock legislature of, 246; results of Sherman's march through, 272; Adm. Dahlgren commanding on the coast of, 273; Thomas's orders for movement through, countermanded, 281; Bragg withdraws troops from Wilmington to, 435

Germanna Ford, Va., operations at, II, 97, 98, 102, 114, 136, 404
INDEX

479

Getty, G. W., his command, II, 99; in battle of Wilderness, II, 57; wounded, 108; retreats to Middletown, 222; in battle of Cedar Creek, 222, 223.

Gettysburg, Pa., battle of, I, 475, 476, II, 47, 54; effect of the battle on the country, I, 475, 478; Hanceck wounded, II, 118; Southern view of the battle, 410.

Gibbon, John, his command, II, 37; in battle of the Wilderness, *111, 113; in battle of Spottsylvania, 120, 123, 143; recommended for major-generalship, U. S. Vols., 139; assaults at Cold Harbor, 166, 167; assaults Fort Gregg, 311, 463; designated to receive pillowage, II, 449, 457.

Gillum, A. C., captures and disperses Morgan's men, II, 425; operations in Tennessee, 434.

Gillmore, Q. A., reinforces the Army of the James, II, 166, 58, 59, 62, 392, 406; sent to attack Petersburg, 410, returns to Bermuda Hundred, 410.

Girard College, visit to, I, 19.

Goliad, Tex., massacre at, I, 34, 48, 49; caring for sick. Angar at, 50, 51; adventure with wolves near, 52, 53.

Gold, use of, for cotton, I, 331.

Gold-digging, in California, I, 159, 160.

Goldsborough, N. C., Sherman's movements toward, at, and near, II, 275, 277, 284, 385, 295, 441, 442, 444, 446, 448; communications with prisoners in possession, II, 433; troops sent to, to cooperate with Sherman, II, 385, 433, 449; Sherman's march to Washington from, 373, 374; retreat of the enemy toward, 441.

Goochland, Va., Sheridan destroys the James River canal near, II, 249, 445.

Gordon, James B., his command, II, 101; Gordon, John C., his death, II, 210; relates anecdote of Lincoln to A. H. Stephens, *290; carries the picket-line at Petersburg, 286; appointed to oversee the paroling of Lee's army, 347.

Gore, John H., at capture of the City of Mexico, 1, 153.

Gorgona, crossing the Isthmus via, I, 154, 155.

Governor's Island, N. Y., the Fourth Infantry at, II, 153.

Grand Campaign, opening of the, II, 71.

Grand Écoré, La., in camp near, I, 31, 55; Banks at, II, 436.

Granger, Gordon, ordered to Louisville, I, *332-334; in action at Fort Wood, II, 3; with Grant on Orchard Knob, 17; ordered to pursue at Missionary Ridge, 17, 18; ordered to relieve of Burnside, 19, 24, 25; orders withholding, 25; dilatoriness of, 26, 37; issues breakfast, 106-108; difficulty with Canby about assigning him to command, 279; sent to cooperate with Farragut at Mobile, 327; commands the Thirteenth Corps, 438; invests Spanish Fort, 458.

Granger, R. S., reinforces Thomas, II, *256.

Granny White road, Tenn., movements on, II, 395.

Grant, George B., dies of consumption, I, 23.

Grant, Frederick Dent, birth of, II, 167; first experiences in the war, *199; at battle of Fort Gibson, 406; at siege of Vicksburg, 406; returns of, II, 42; at the White House, 41.

Grant, Hannah, I, 6.

Grant, Jesse R., birth of, I, 3; in family of Judge Root, 3; learns trade in Mayaville, 3; returns to Deerfield, 4; thirst for education, 1, 5, 8; interest in Grant estate in Connecticut, 5; political views, 5; mayor of Georgetown, 6; marries Hannah Simpson, 7; social position, 8; parental control, 14; difference with Hamer, 15, 16; removes from Georgetown to Bethel, 21; mayor of Bethel, 21; visits, 153.

Grant, John, dies of consumption, I, 23.

Grant, Mrs. Julia D., returns to St. Louis, I, 153; desires F. D. Grant to accompany his father, 153; visits Louisville with General Grant, 191; joins her husband in Washington, II, 357; goes to Burlington, 358. See also DENT, JULIA.

Grant, Matthew, I, 1.

Grant, Noah, (great-grandfather of U. S. Grant), I, 2.

Grant, Charles Noah (grandfather of U. S. Grant), resides in Ohio, I, 2, 3; settles in Mayaville, 3.

Grant, Noah (uncle of U. S. Grant), dies of consumption, I, 23; in business at Galena, I, *172.

Grant, Peter, settles in Pennsylvania, I, 2; signs an Oath, Ky., 3; drowned, 3.

Grant, Priscilla, I, 1.

Grant, Rachel, I, 2, 3.

Grant, Samuel, I, 1.

Grant, Samuel S., dies of consumption, I, 23; in business at Galena, I, *172.

Grant, Solomon (5th generation), I, 2.

Grant, Solomon (uncle of U. S. Grant), eulogizes, to the West Indies, I, 2.

Grant, Ulysses Simpson, his ancestry, I, 1-7; his mother's influence on his character, 6; birth, 7; early life and education, 7-16; how he learned the law, 10, 12; appointed to West Point, 11-16; journey to, and life at West Point, 18-22; an early presentiment, 22; enters the Fourth Infantry, 22; fears consumption, 23; first uniform, 23, 24; reports for duty at Jefferson Barracks, 23; carrieson life at St. Louis, 23-27; friendship with the Dent family, 26; discovers himself in love, 26, 27; ordered to Fort Jessup, 27; leave of absence, 27-31; a dip in Graves Creek, 28, 29; superstitions of, 29, 32; engaged to Julia Dent, 29, 30; contemplates a mathematical professorship, 30, 31; keeps a journal, 31; at Camp Subtrift, 31, 34-36; reviews the causes and conduct of the Mexican War, 32-34, 44-46, 88-93, 96, 105, 127-135; free from fears of consumption, 36; condemned dancing, 37; leaves New Orleans for Corpus Christi, 39; suppresses a mutiny, 40; an involuntary bath in Corpus Christi Bay, 40, 41; expedition from Corpus Christi to San Antonio, 47-53; a failure as a sportsman, 55; adventure with wolves, 52, 53; promoted full second lieutenant; transferred from the Fourth to the Seventh Infantry and back, 53, 54; purchase and loss of horses in Mexico, 57, 58; in advance from Corpus Christi, 59-63; first impressions of war, 66; in battle of Pueblo Alto, 67-70; first contact with the enemy, 69; in the battle of Resaca de la Palma, 70-72; expectations from T. L. Hamer, 75, 76; quartermaster and commissary, Fourth Infantry, 77; July 10, 77; at Monterey, 82 et seq., volunteered services at Monterey, 86, 87; transferred from Gen. Taylor's command to that of Gen. Worth, 93, 94; at Vera Cruz, 96-98; in battle of Cerro Gordo, 100, 101; in advance on the City of Mexico, 105 et seq.; in battle of Molino del Rey, 118, 119; commanding volunteer force at San Cosme Garita, 122-124; the gun in the belfry, 123, 124; promoted, first lieutenant, 126; demands truthful history, 132; attends a Mexican bull-fight, 137-139; concludes the sport, 137, 139, 140; regimental quartermaster, Fourth Infantry, 140-142; on pleasure trips in Mexico, 142-150; value of experience in the Mexican War to, 151, 152; ordered to Pasacagulla, 153; July 10, 153; in garrison at Sackett's Harbor, 153; in garrison at Detroit, 153; declines citizenship in Michigan, 153; ordered to the Pacific coast, 159-167; agricultural experiment at Fort Vancouver, 164; promoted captain, 164; resigns from the army, 167; birth of children to, 167; farming near St. Louis, 167, 168; fever and ague, 168; in real-estate business in St. Louis, 168; candidate for office of county engineer, 168; removes to Galena, 168; joins the American Party, 169; opinions on sects and secret societies, 169, 170; votes for Buchanan, 173; position in Galena, 171, 172; interest in election of 1860, 172 et seq.; on the rights of revolution and secession, 173 et seq.; presides at meeting at Galena, 184; drills troops at Galena, 190; in official adjutant-general of Illinois, 190;募sters troops into Illinois State service, 197; witnesses stirring scenes in St. Louis, 187-189; offers services to the government, 192; fails to secure appointment from McClellan, 193; appointed colonel 21st Illinois, 194; in camp at Springfield, 194; meets McClellan and Logan, 195-197; disciplines his troops, 193, 200, 202; ordered to Missouri, 192; at Pahayte, 199; sensations at leading a regiment into battle, 199; brushes up tactics, 393, 394; appointed brigadier-general, 291; succeeds Padua, 291-293; commanding District of Tronton, 205; moves against Price, 208; at Jefferson City, 209, 210; difference with Price, 211-213; assumes command at Cairo, 213, 214; seizes Paducah, 214-216; attempt to capture, 217; movement against Belmont, 218-222; battle of Belmont, 222-223; narrow escape at Belmont, 223-227; capture of Forts Henry and Heiman, 231-240; commanding District of Cairo, 233; siege of Fort Donelson, 241-250; created major-general of volunteers, 260; goes to Nashville, 262; difficulties with Haleck, 267-270; threats of arrest, 269; relieved of command, 279; restored to command, 279 at Pittsburg Landing and Shiloh, 272-296; captured by fall with horse at Pittsburg Landing, 276; leads the final charge at Shiloh, 297; definitely commanding right-wing of Haleck's army at Pittsburg Landing, 307; in advance on Corinth, 307-314; refuses to send in charges to Shiloh, 308; Shiloh, 308; annoying position on march to Chattanooga, 312-314; asks to be relieved from duty under Haleck, 313, 319; headquarters at Memphis, 319-320; difficulty with cotton bale, 321; danger of capture, 322, 323; recalled to Corinth, 325, 326; commanding District of West Tennessee, 326; ordered to live upon the country, 329; operations against Van Dorn and Price, 355 et seq.; battle of Iuka, 338-343; battle of Corinth, 345-349; commanding Department of the Tennessee, 350; the campaign against Vicksburg, 354-362; strength at opening of Vicksburg campaign, 362; employing freedmen, 353, 354; troubles with McClellan, 355, 358-360, 357, 368, 364, 429, 430, 436, 444, 457; at Holly Springs, 355, 356; ordered to assume his command in four army corps, 360; assumes command at Young's Point, 358; newspaper comments on his position before Vicksburg, 382; fails to communicate orders supported by the President and Haleck, 358, 384; visit to New Carthage, 359; issues Special Orders No. 16, 350-352; attack on Grand Gulf, 396; assumes command below Vicksburg, 409 et seq.; capture of Port Gibson, 406-407; lack of comforts, 406, 407, 410; occupation of Grand Gulf, 490, 410; cuts across Tennessee, 410; Grand Gulf, 411; movement up the Big Black, 412-417; battle of Raymond, 414, 415; capture of Jackson, 417-424; battle of Champion's Hill, 428-436; battle of Black River Bridge, 437-440; crossing the Big Black, 440, 441; investment of Vicksburg, 441 et seq.; assaulting the works, 441-445; siege of Vicksburg, 446 et seq.; credited by Sherman with the Vicksburg campaign, 447, 454; surrender of Vicksburg, 464-473; enters Vicksburg, 473; retrospect of the Vicksburg campaign, 478-482; proposes campaign against Mobile, 484; visits Banks, 486, 487; accident in New Orleans, 487; ordered to report at Cairo, 489; meeting with Stanton, 490, 491, 496, 497; commanding Military Division of Mississippi, 491, 497; meeting with Andrew Johnson, 497; arrival at Chattanooga, 499; assumes command at Chattanooga, 501; opens the "cracker line," 501 et seq.; saluted by the pickets of the enemy at Chattanooga, 594, 510; plans of the battle of Chattanooga, 518 et seq.; battle of Lookout Mountain, 51, 52 et seq.; battle of Chattanooga, 12 et seq.; note congratulating his autobiographical work, 23; congratulating President Lincoln on the raising of the siege of Knoxville, 32; headquarters at Nashville, 329; Congress votes a gold medal to, for Vicksburg and Chattanooga, 33; presented with the "Chattanooga sword," 33; final deposition of medals, swords, etc., presented to, 33; visit to Knoxville, 34, 35; difference with Stanton, 36-37; operations
INDEX

481

Vol. II.—31

in Mississippi, 39-41; commissioned lieutenant general, 44, 45, 97; first interview with President Lincoln, 44, 45-50; disposition to public speaking, 48; visits the Army of the Potomac at Brandy Station, 45-50; relations with Nicolae, 46, 47; placed in command of all the armies, 47, 55, 399;
headquarters at Culpeper Court House, 51, 66, 67; interviews with Lincoln, 67, 68; unpleasant experiences with William Swinton, 68-70; commencement of the Grand Army of the Union, 71 et seq.; declining health, and hasty completion of his Memoirs, 71; commendation of Butler by, 76; goes from Cleveland to Washington, 81; approves Johnson's tactics in Atlanta campaign, 88; grand movement of the Army of the Potomac, 95 et seq.; leaves Culpeper Court House for the front, 96; speeches in Congress, 105 et seq.; plan of initiating attack, 107; narrow escape from capture, 121; battle of Spotsylvania, 126 et seq.; aids a Union woman in Virginia to enter the Confederate service, 133; battle of the North Anna, 139; an incident of the march, 152, 153; battle of Cold Harbor, 162 et seq.; correspondence with Lee regarding dead and wounded, 178; visits Lee, Jackson across the Chickahominy and James, 174-182; visits Butler at Bermuda Hundred, 185, 186, 412; movement on Petersburg, 186-191; relief of Union forces at Petersburg, 196, 197; the Petersburg mine, 198-203; proposes to follow the enemy to the death, 206; visits Hunter on the Monocacy, 207, 208, 418, 419; revision of the Grand Army of the Union, 210-215; visit to Sheridan, 214, 215; close of the campaign for the winter, 1864-65, 223; approves
J. E. Johnston's military policy, 224, 225; praise for Davis' military policy, 228, 236; invites Sherman's views, 231, 232; authorizes Sherman to cut loose from his base, 238; definitely approves Sherman's movements, 246, 249, 250; credits Sherman with plans and execution of the march to the sea, 252, 253; proposes to go to Nashville to observe Sherman's movements, 256, 259, 338; threatens Thomas with removal, 259; expedition against Fort Fisher, 263-270, 435, 439, 440; requests that Butler be relieved, 439; approves Sherman's plan of march through the Carolinas, 272, 441; goes to Washington, Jan. 21, 1865, 273; provisions for cooperation with Sherman, 274-275; orders campaign against Mobile, 274, 275, 277, 279; congratulates Thomas, 285; makes four of inspection with Schofield, 290; holds Lee down at Richmond, 293; receives the Peace Commissioners, 287, 288; refuses from discussing peace with the Commissioners, 288; refuses to acknowledge the Confederate government, 288; visited by Lincoln at City Point, 289, 290; fears a prolongation of the war, 291; anxiety before Petersburg, 291, 293; impatience for the spring campaign of 1865, 293; battle of White Oak Road, 298; interview with Sheridan at Petersburg, 290, 306; authorizes the removal of Warren, 306; enters Petersburg, 314; statement of a so-called engineer of the Army of Northern Virginia, 314, 315; congratulated by the President at Petersburg, 318; plan for Sherman to unite with, 318; fall of Richmond, 329; pursuit of Lee, 330, 332; a night ride following Thomas, 332; battle of Sailor's Creek, 328; goes to Kar ville, 333; correspondence and communica tions with Lee, concerning surrender, 333, 334, 337, 341; sickness before Lee's surren der, 335, 338; disclaims authority to treat for peace, 338; contrasted with Lee, 341, 342; acquaintance with Lee, 341, 342; goes to Washington, 345, 355; declines the President's invitation to attend Ford's Theater, 357; informed of the assassination of the President, 358; views on recon struction and negro suffrage, 359-361; goes to North Carolina to adjust Sher man's difficulties, 363; anxiety for cap ture of Mobile, 366; feeling in regard to Jefferson Davis, 368, 369; the end of the war, 377 et seq.; grand review at Washing ton, 378-380; estimates of his corps commanders, 382-385; opinion on slavery, 386; conclusion of peace, 388, 390; Confederate symp tathy for, 396; interview with Sheridan at Monocacy, 399; correspondence with But ner, 178, 435, 436; with Casby, 269, 270, 399; with Harris, 208; visits Harris, 214, 218, 255, 266, 411; with Hunter, 176, 418; with Lee, 169-171, 333, 334, 337-339, 343-346, 344-347; with Lincoln, 266, 367; with Meade, 184, 185, 186, 200; with Schofield, 440; with Sheridan, 221, 222, 278, 323, 344, 434, 450, 451; with Sherman, 239-243, 249, 258, 273-276, 429, 430, 453, 454; with Stanton, 139, 198, 206, 207, 337, 338; with Thomas, 275, 283, 429, 435, 446
Grant, Ulysses Simpson, Jr. ('Buck'), 1
Gravelly Run, Va., Warren's delay at, 11, 305
Graves Creek, Mo., Grant's mischance in the, I, 28, 29
Gravesville, Ga., movements at and near, 11, 18, 19, 25, 26
Great Britain, insists on effective blockade, 11, 261
Greensboro, N. C., operations at and near, 11, 45, 458
Greensburg, Pa., settlement of Noah Grant near, I, 2
Greeneville, Miss., Steele's expedition to, 1, 332
Greenwood, Mo., movement against Hardee at, I, 207, 268
Greenville, Tenn., Morgan killed near, II, 245
Greenwood, Miss., fortifications at, I, 376
Gregg, John, rights McLemore at Raymond, I, '415; in Army of Northern Virginia, 11, 101
Gregg, D. McE., engagement on the Chicka domny, II, 79; crosses Ely's Ford, 98; his command, 99; advances toward Chau cellorsville, 103; in battle of the Wilder ness, 105; movement toward Hanover, 110; action at Hawes' shop, 158; threatenin g movements against Richmond, 209, 210; unsuccessful attempt to destroy the Weldon railroad, 224; returns to the front of Petersburg, 241; defeated at Reams's Station, 242; attacked near Poplar Spring Church, 242
Gregg, J. I., II, 99
Grenada, Miss., movements at and near, I, 352, 359, 365, 454, II, 434
Greengus, Los,' Mexican opinion of, I, 79
Gresham, W. G., wounded before Atlanta, I, 188
Grierson, B. H., raids in Mississippi, I, 408, II, 434; sent to command Canby's cavalry
Griffin, Charles, his command, II, 98; transferred to Hancock's corps, 138; at Jericho Ford, 139; in battle of Five Forks, 306, 306; succeeds Warren in command of the Fifth Corps, 142, 432; intruchiied across the railroad south of Jetersville, 323; movement, April 6, 1865, 336; movement via Prince Edward's Court House, 352; in engagement at Appomattox Station, 356; designated to receive the paroles of Lee's army, 347, 457; military character, 385; action near the Quaker road, 451
Griffin, Simon G., II, 100
Griffith, James, I, 6
Griffith, Louis, I, 6
Griffith, Mary, I, 6
Grimes's Brigade, II, 101
Grindstone crossing, the, I, 409
Grocer, Gen., I, 18
Grose, William, operations at Lookout Creek, II, 118
Guadalupe, the road to the City of Mexico through, I, 128
Guadalupe Hidalgo, treaty of, I, 134, 137, 152
Guadalupe River, I, 49, 309
Guerrillas, raids by, I, 260, 318, 331, 332, 486, 512, II, 398, 399, 425
Guiney's Station, Va., movements at, II, 116-118
Gulf, Mexico, Canby to operate in the interior from the, II, 275
Gunboats, at Belmont, I, 219, 227; at Fort Henry, 236, 238-240; their value, 241; at Fort Donelson, 244-250, 257; at Chickamauga, 292; at Pittsburg Landing, 285, 288, 363; at Memphis, 317, 328; at Vicksburg, 337, 340, 347; at Arkansas Post, 366; at Yazoo Pass, 376; at Fort Pemberton, 378; on the bayous, 377-379; at Grand Gulf, 396; at Haines's Bluff, 460; capture of, by Forrest's cavalry, II, 229, 432; at Fort Fisher, 253; at Plymouth, 467; in Red River, 456
Guntown, Mississippi, defeat of Sturgis by Forrest at, II, 421
Hackleman, P. A., killed at Corinth, I, *348
Hagerstown, Md., occupied by the enemy, I, 416
Haines's Bluff, Miss., operations at, I, 371, 389, 400, 401, 414, 418, 453, 456, 458, 482, 484
Hains, Peter C., bridge-building by, I, 389, 441
Halleck, Henry W., supersedes Gen. Frémont, II, 237; visit to, at St. Louis, 234, 235; orders movement against Fort Henry, 235; sends reinforcements to Grant at Fort Donelson, 243; attitude on subject of capturing Donelson, 244; congratulates Hunter, 260; credits C. F. Smith with capture, 260; Grant's difficulties with, 260, 261, 267-270, 305, 306, 319; calls for more troops, 269; congratulatory letter to Grant, 270; opinion of C. F. Smith, 270; Grant's letter to, after Shiloh, 305; assumes command in the field, 305, 307, 334; establishes headquarters at Pittsburg Landing, 366, 307; Grant's reasons for sending report of Shiloh to, 305, 306; his army at Pittsburg Landing, 307; orders Grant to send in report of Shiloh, 308; headquarters on road to Corinth, 313; bruens on a suggestion of a large movement against Corinth, 314; unifies the Rebel forces at Corinth, 315; fortifies Corinth, 316; depletes his army, 317, 327; Grant asks permission to remove headquarters to Memphis, 319; appointed to command of all the armies, 325; boundaries of his district, 326; orders the repair of the Mobile and Ohio railroad, 326; leaves Corinth for Washington, 326; advice from, as to the scattering of troops, 329; advises the reinforcing of Buell, 329; relations with Sheridan, 333, 334; anxiety about Tennessee, 337, 323, II, 11; correspondence with, concerning Rosecrans's subordination, I, 348; proposal to, to move against Vicksburg, 349; despatch to, announcing opening of the Vicksburg campaign, 352; grants his request to command to Grant, 355; orders reinforcements from Helena, 356; consultation with, as to movements against Vicksburg, 358; informed of the Duckport capture, 359; supposes he is informed of successes at Grand Gulf, 410; character and peculiarities, 411, 485; advises to, concerning reinforcements for J. E. Johnston, 419; notified of pending attack on Jackson, 421; orders Grant to return to Grand Gulf and cooperate with Banks, 410; forwards reinforcements to Vicksburg, 449, 456; news of the surrender of Vicksburg announced to, 474; misunderstanding about prisoners, 478, 479; trans-Mississippi campaign views of, 484; disapproves the Mobile project, 484, 485; orders troops to Memphis and Duscomb, 487; suggests that Sherman be sent to Memphis, 488; alarmed at results of Chickamauga, 488; suggests that Grant go to Nashville, 488, 491; Grant's suggestions to, concerning Rosecrans, 492; orders Rosecrans to move against Bragg, 492; informs Grant of results of Chickamauga, 494; notified of Grant's arrival at Chattanooga, 508; orders reinforcements for Rosecrans, 503; congratulations from, on operations of Nov. 24, 1863, II, 11; informed of the battle of Chattanooga, 19; letter from, concerning Foster and Schofield, 43; invites views of campaign for the armies of the Military Division of the Mississippi, 48; Grant writes to, concerning the spring campaign, 48; cautious Grant against confiding plans to the President, 51; Grant's reticence with, 52; suggests Sheridan for command of cavalry, 66; warned against holding Plymouth and Washington, N. C., 64; orders Banks to operate on the Red River, 64, 65; announces Sigel's defeat and retreat, 72; letters and despatches from Grant to; (May 11, 1864) 139, (May 12) 138, (May 14) 141, (May 20) 411, (May 25) 411, (May 26) 158, (June 5) 174, (June 17) 188, (Aug. 1) 205, 206; inquiry addressed to, concerning Sigel, 142; asidt secured to secure naval cooperation in Tarrant's female base from Fredericksburg to Port Royal, 142; orders to send
INDEX

Hunter through, 152; orders for Butler sent through, 154; orders to, May 30, 1864, 159; unfolding of plan to, for left-flank movement across the Chickahominy and James, 174; ordered to send reinforcements to City Point, 178; notified of operations before Petersburg, 188; bad policy concerning the Shenandoah Valley, 286; differs from, 288; issues order of resistance to the draft, 210; advises taking in sail, 210; revision of Grant's orders by, 214; garbles an order to Sheridan, 221; Grant suggests mes for him near Mobile to, 233; bitter opposition to Sherman's movements in Georgia, 253; interview with, 274; views as to movements about Petersburg and City Point, 302; sent to Richmond to command Virginia, 374; forbids Sherman's troops to obey him, 374; Sherman resents his indignities, 374; Sheridan ordered to report to, 418.

Halls of the Montezumas, the, I, 125, 127

Haltown, Va., movement of troops to, II, 397, 418

Hamberg Landing, Tenn., operations at, I, 244, 436, 460

Hamer, T. L., difference with Jesse R. Grant, I, 15, 16; procures Grant's appointment to West Point, 15, 16; personal relations with, 15; major of O.O. volunteers in Mexico, 75; character, 75; death, 75

Hamilton, C. S., promoted major-general, I, 359; commanding center of the Army of the Potomac, 352

Hampton, Wade, his command, II, 192; ordered to the defense of the Valley, 193; defeated by Sheridan, 193; returns to Richmond, 194; opposes LUnfortunately Columbia, 282; abandons Columbia, 282; denies the firing of Columbia, 282; escapes from Sherman at Fayetteville, 284; capture of cattle by, 289

Hanover Road, Va., interview between the President and the Peace Commissioners at, 289, 290, 363; arrival of the Nineteenth Corps at, 416; conference between Porter, Butler, and Grant at, 435; formation of the Port Fisher expedition at, 433

Hancock, W. S., commanding Second Army-corps, II, 57; crosses the Rapidan, 28, 105, 106; orders for movements, May 5, 1864, 106; in battle of the Wilderness, 107-114; ordered to take the right of line, 120; enthusiasm of his corps, 120; expected attack on, 125; orders for, May 7, 120; at Todd's Tavern, 121-125, 127; ordered to support Warren, 123; relative positions of Warren and, 125; detained from battle of Spotsylvania, 125; on the Brock road, 126; in battle of Spotsylvania, 127-128, 131-133, 405; Griffin's division transferred to, 133; recommended for brigadier-generalship, U. S. A., 139; movement, May 14-15, 1864, 140; assaults, May 16, 141; reinforcements for, 142; comes to Tyler's assistance, 143; military and personal characteristics, 143, 148, 189, 258, 384; orders for his advance toward Richmond, 145; march to Milford, 146; attempts to get between Lee and Richmond, 147; ordered to Chesterfield Ford, 148; crosses the North Anna, 149; ordered to send reinforcements to OX Ford, 150; Burnside ordered to send troops to, 150; Potter joins, 150; crosses the North Anna at Chesterfield Ford, 153; supports for, 155; ordered to move toward Hanover Town, 155; movement, May 27, 1864, 156; position on the Pamunkey, 157; position, May 30, 186; advances toward Totopotomoy Creek, 158; to throw troops across the Totopotomoy, 159; action, May 30, 159, 161; attack on, June 1, 164; movement, June 1-2, 164, 165; ordered to advance to and place troops near, June 3, 165, 166; situation at Cold Harbor, 168; his left extended to the Chickahominy, 177; crosses the Chickahominy at Long Bridge, 181; crosses the James, 182; at Chinn's City, Corporal, 183; operations before Petersburg, 185-186, 143, 413, 421; wounded at Gettysburg, 188; temporarily relieved by Meade, 188; Burney in command of his corps, 190; movements from June 3, 190, 192; in action at Hatcher's Run, 422; concentrates at Winchester, 446

Hankinson's Ferry, Miss., operations at, I, 197, 198

Hanibal & St. Joseph railroad, Grant ordered to duty on, the, I, 198

Hanover Court House, Va., operations at, I, 273, 275

Hanover Town, Va., movements at, II, 163-167, 408

Hardee, W. J., his "Tactics," I, 64, 283; captured by Mecias, 64; in command at Greenville, "226; last battle before Atlanta, II, 93; abandons Atlanta, 93; raises troops to confront Sherman, 247; blows up the navy-yard and evacuates Savannah, 245, 259; opposes Sherman's movements through the Carolinas, 280; escapes from Sherman at Fayetteville, 284

Hardeeville, S. C., movement of Sherman's left from, II, 273; "Hard tack! hard tack!" I, 143

Hard Times, Miss., assembling at, II, 391, 395; McPherson at, 460; difficulty of bringing up the train to, 467; F. P. Blair at, 412

Hardwicke, Va., destruction of bridge at, II, 415

Harris, N. H., II, 160

Harrington, A., 18

Harrington, Va., Sheridan and Early at, II, 216, 220, 420

Harris's Store, Va., movements at, II, 114, 189

Hartford, Ky., the Soldiers' Home in, I, 133

"Hartford," the, passes the batteries at Fort Hudson, I, 158

Harrington, John F., his command, II, 109; in action before Petersburg, March 24, 1865, "298

Hartsuff, G. L., II, "310, 311
INDEX

Haslett, Lieut., I, 51
Hatch, Edward, in Mississippi, I, 408
Hatch, John P., to destroy Hardee's communications at Savannah, II, 231; commanding expedition on Broad River, 452; defeats at Honey Hill, 452
Hatcher's Run, Va., movements, engagements, etc., on, II, 293, 307, 308, 422, 447, 450, 451, 453
Hatchie River, operations on the, I, 322, 335
Hawes's Shop, Va., action at, II, 158, 160
Hawkins, John P., chief commissary, at Shiloh, I, 291
Hawkins's, troop ordered to, II, 148
Hayes, Landing, Va., camps at, II, 79, 406
Hayes, R. B., military career and character, II, 224
Hays, Alexander, his command, II, 97; killed in the Wilderness, *168
Hays, H. T., II, 101
Hazen, W. B., in expedition to Brown's Ferry, I, 501, 503; captures Fort McAllister, II, 218
Hébert, Paul O., I, 161
Heckman, C. A., succeeds Ord in command, II, 219
Helena, Ark., movements, operations, etc., at, I, 315, 356, 358, 365, 375, 473
Henderson's Hill, La., battle of, II, 426
Henry Clay, the, running the batteries at Vicksburg, I, 166
Herron, F. J., in siege of Vicksburg, I, 456, 458
Heth, Henry, his command, II, 102; in the Wilderness, 102; cut off from Petersburg, II, 110
Hickman, Ky., Confederate occupation of, I, 216; Union capture of, 304
Hickman's Creek, Tenn., I, 243, 245, 255
Hick's, G., repulses Forrest at Paducah, II, 242
Hicksford, Va., destruction of railroad at, II, 299, 402, 422, 427
High Bridge, Va., movements and operations at, II, 338, 339, 333, 454
Hill, A. P., ordered to attack via Orange plank road, II, 106; Longstreet to reinforce, 109; failure to pursue, after battle of the Wilderness, 123; succeeded in command by Early, 131; defeated by Kautz, 133, 407; attacks and is defeated by War ren, 149; engages Crittenden at crossing of the North Anna, 150
Hillyer, W. S., appointed aide-de-camp, I, 205; brings bad news at Fort Donelson, 250; suggests that Grant exchange into Army of the Potomac, 383
Hitlon Head, S. C., Union possession of, II, 53, 248, 383
Hinks, E. W., commanding colored troops in movement against Petersburg, I, 116
History, the need of truthful, I, 132
Hoffman, William, at Chuckwassoo, I, 312
Hoke, R. P., his command, II, 101; in North Carolina, 144; reinforce Lee, 151; reinforced by Beauregard, 138; sent to Fort Fisher, 305, 306; captures Plymouth, 407
Holly Springs, Miss., Price at I, 329; Pemberton at, 343, 352; Union capture of, 355; captured at Honey Hill, 452
Hollands, T. H., early acquaintance with, I, 54, 151; repulsed at Helena, 473
Holston River, movements on, for relief of Burnside, II, 19, 24, 28, 29; Union holdings 53
Honey Hill, S. C., defeat of Hatchet at, II, 432
Hood, J. B., succeeds Johnston, II, 457, 227, 256, 423; battles before Atlanta, 88-90; blows up works and evacuates Atlanta, 93; assumes the offensive, 227; military policy of, under supervision of General Georgi a State troops, 229; operations between Sherman and, in retreat from Atlanta, 231, 234-331, 236, 429-431; correspondence with Sherman, 231; strength after At lanta, 236; Sherman's anticipation of his movements, 238; moves north, 238, 239, 429-439; under Beauregard's supervising command, 429; crosses the Tennessee at Florence, 241, 432; advances on Nash ville, 239, 431; strength, 250, 254; turns Schofield's position, 251; defeated at Franklin, 253, 256, 431; invests Nashville, 256, 335, 440; Thomas prepares to receive, 256; fears of his chiding Thomas, 256-258; fears of his getting north, 257, 258; defeated at Nashville, 250, 254, 423, 420; gets possession of Franklin, 254; made good his escape, 250; destroys bridges over Duck River, 250; recrosses the Tennessee, 257, 276, 435; sluggish pursuit of, 274, 434; remains with Sherman, 277, 283, 429, 430, fails to capture Decatur, 429; junction with Forrest, 422; demoralization of his army, 443
Hooker, Joseph, commanding reinforcements at Chattanooga, I, 506; expedition to Brown's Ferry, 501, 504; supplies the troops at Chattanooga with full rations, 566; strength, 566; in battle of Wauhatchie, 568, 597; plan of operations at Lookout Mountain, Chattanooga, and Missionary Ridge, 507, 510, 520; position in Lookout Valley, 521; change in orders to, 251, 252, 11, 4, 23; Osterhains ordered to report to, 13; operations west of Chattanooga, 7; sends General up Lookout Creek, 8; in battle of Lookout Mountain, 9, 10, 386; orders to attack, Nov. 25, 1863, 12; in battle of Chattanooga, 14, 18, 383; crosses Chattanooga Creek, 19; operations at Rossville, 19; muzzling of forces under, at Chattanooga, 20; his work at Chatta nooga planned beforehand, 23; movement from Rossville toward Ringgold, 31; operations at Ringgold, 26; battle before Atlanta, 88; commanding Army of the Potomac, 382; military and personal characteristics, 383; drives the enemy to New Hope Church, 423
Horses, Grant's fondness for, I, 9, 10; incidents and accidents with, 16-12, 57, 88, 87, 226, 276, 279, 282, 497; Mexican trade in, 47; wild in Texas, 46, 47, 61; price of, in Corpus Christi, 57, 88, 61
Hoskins, Charles, adjutant, Fourth Infantry, I, 383; killed at Montery, 54
Hospitals, before Vicksburg, I, 382; service between Duckport and Milliken's Bend, 391
Howe, A. P., cuts the road in Pemberton's rear, I, 350; at battle of Port Gibson, 403; at Baton, 426; in battle of Champ lion's Hill, 428, 429, 451-453
Howard, Charles, at meeting at Gal len's, I, 31
Howard, O. O., headquarters at Jasper, I,
INDEX

INDEX

INDEX

"498; commanding Eleventh Corps, 363; ordered to reinforce Rosecrans, 503; captures Brown's Peop. 516; ordered to Garey's relief at Wauhatchie, 508; plan of operations at Chattanooga, 519; march of, deceives the enemy, 524, 525; in action at Fort Wood, II, 9; crosses G'horo Creek, 7; junction with Sherman, 7; ordered to cross the Chickamauga, 19; serving under Sherman at Chattanooga, 29; commanding right wing of Sherman's army, 214; gives Logan in command, 406, 423; marches to Jonesboro, 240; military ability, 423

Hudson, Capt., mission to Sherman, II, 275

Hudson Bay Co., Indian trade in the Northwest, I, 165, 164

Humboldt, Tenn., Ord's command at, I, 335

Humboldt Bay, Cal., the Fourth Infantry ordered to, I, 164, 165

Humphreys, A. A., put in special charge of Warren's corps, II, *138; recommended for major-generalship, U. S. Vols., 135; chief of staff, Potomac, 226; assigned to command the Second Corps, 226; in battle of White Oak Road, 226; at Five Forks, 303, 304, 352; in action of April 2, 1865, 319, 332, 315; at Sheridan's St. Anthony, 314; goes to Miles's relief, 312, 313; reinforces Sheridan, 316; out of actions, 322, 324; reaches Gettysburg, 325; confronts Lee, 328, 333; reinforced by New 333, 334; military character, 385; at Hatchet's Run, 456, 457, 453

Humphreys, B. G., II, 101

Hundred-days men, serve in duty for, I, 416

Hunts, commanding artillery, Army of the Potomac, II, *197, 100

Hunter, David, sends reinforcements to Grant, I, *234; congratulated of Halleck's nomination to Buford Halleck's niarcli the...
INDEX

Bolton from. 437; Federal losses at. 447; Johnston falls back on, 482; Sherman besieges, 482, 483: Johnston evacuates, 483; casualties at second capture, 483; feeding the destitute at, 483: Sherman enters, II, 41

Jacksom, Tenn., movements, communications, etc., at, I, 211, 212, 372, 326, 327, 332, 333, 338, 344, 340; Grant leaves, to command the Vicksburg campaign, 352; Forrest's raid near, 353

Jackson and Vicksburg railroad, Grant's line on the, I, 415

Jacksonport, Ark., Price at, II, 427

Jacksonville, Mo., troops ordered to, I, 211

Jalapa, Mex., I, 89, 102, 134, 172

James River, the depot for exchange of prisoners on, I, 469, 477; country between the Rapidan and the, II, 55, 96; Butler's operations on, 38, 59, 62, 65, 73, 110, 185, 225, 402, 403, 406, 407, 414, 422; Gillmore and Smith's operations on, 58; base of supplies on, 62, 243, 401; plan of naval operations on, 63; the campaign from the Rapidan to the, 66, 411; Butler's position between the Appomattox and the, 74, 407; Sheridan's operations on, 77-79, 293, 404, 414, 445, 446; movement of the Army of the Potomac from the, 153, 157, 174, 175, 178, 180, 182, 183, 185, 194, 199, 200, 204, 209, 211, 212, 219, 230, 291, 299, 308, 310, 403, 406, 410, 415, 415-420, 421, 443, 448; Col. Connick's mission to the, 189; preventing Confederates from leaving the, 182, 185; country north of, held by the Army of the James, 191, 229; the whole army on, 194; Lee's troops drawn to the north of, 199, 202; the Union lines on, 219, 241; Confederate attacks on the north side, 225; proposition to transport Sherman's army from Savannah to the, 272; reinforcement from the north side of the, 297; Lee's troops on the north side, 304, 421; Lee orders Longstreet from the north side, 310; Union crossing of the, the deathblow to the Confederates, 297; Sherman's troops in camp at, 374; Union holdings on, 398; defeat of Kautz on, 421, 422

James River canal, destruction of, II, 175-177, 221, 222, 257, 294

Jasper, Tenn., Howard's headquarters at, I, 498

Jefferson Barracks, Mo., Grant reports for duty at, I, 23

Jefferson City, Mo., Grant commanding at, I, 208; restoring order, 299; employing refugees, 208, 210; relieved by Jefferson C. Davis, 210

Jenkins, Micah, killed in the Wilderness, II, 312

Jenkins's Ferry, Ark., battle of, II, 437

Jerrold Bridge, Va., troops ordered to, II, 148-150, 409

Jerkem plank road, Va., movements on the, II, 447, 451

Jeter'sville, Va., movements, engagements, etc., at and near, II, 322, 323, 325, 455, 454; movements of the Army of the Potomac from the, II, 497; citizens of, present a sword to Gen. Grant, II, 33

"John Rain," the, transport steamer at Nashville, I, 294

Johnson, Andrew, first meeting with, I, 497; attitude toward the South, II, 358-361, 369, 370; supposed assassination of, 358; conflict with Congress, 361; denounces Sherman, 366, 368, 367; at the grand review in Washington, 378, 379

Johnson, Edward, his command, II, 101; captured, 136, 138, 405

Johnson, R. W., in action at Fort Wood, II, 3; battle before Atlanta, 788

Johnsonville, Tenn., Forrest's captures at, II, 432; military reaches, 432

Johnston, A. S., early acquaintance with, I, 151; Pillow's telegram from Fort Donelson to, 234; commanding in the West, 295; strength of his command, 255, 256; defeated at Mill Springs, 266; awaiting the result of the siege of Fort Donelson, 266; fatal mistake of, 266, 267; opinion concerning Fort Donelson, 267; abundant Nashville and Chattanooga, 267; killed at Shiloh, 267, 296, 297; fortifying at Corinth, 275, 298; marches to Shiloh from Corinth, 275, 298; his cavalry at Pittsburg Landing, 275; orders from Pres. Davis to, 297; his personality, 297-299; plan of campaign at Shiloh, 298; method of raising reinforcements, 310

Johnston, Joseph E., early acquaintance with, I, 151; arrives at Jackson, 419; directs Pemberton to attack Grant, 421; reinforcements for, 421, 444, 445, 452, 453; evacuate Jackson, 422; moves toward Mobile, 422; on the defensive in Georgia, 448, 450; capture of Fort Donelson, 480, 481, 71, 72; Sherman's campaign against, 49, 58, 59, 61, 82, 83, 399, 422, 423; at Dalton, 57, 58, 85, 119, 399; surprised by McPherson, 85; Newton engages his rear, 85; abounds Dalton, 85, 140; at Resaca, 85, 423; falls back to Marietta and Kennesaw Mountain, 86, 423; abounds Allatoona, 86; abounds Kennesaw Mountain, 87; retreats across the Chattahoochee, 87; superseded by Hood, 87, 227, 236, 423; military policy, ability, and character, 87, 88, 227, 228, 256, 250, 399; feeling between Pres. Davis and, 228, 236, 238; put in command of all troops in North and South Carolina, 280, 284; confronts Sherman in North Carolina, 285, 301, 362, 442, 453, 457; at Averyboro and Bentonville, 283; demoralization of his army, 256; fears of Lee's junction with, 289, 336, 440, 446, 449; hopeless position of, 362; Sherman's difficulty with the authorities about the terms granted to, 363-366, 374, 379, 457; capture of Petersburg, 393

Johnston, R. D., II, 101

Johnston, W. F., estimate of Confederates at Fort Donelson, I, 258; biographer of A. S. Johnston, 298

Joliet, Ill., imprisonment of rebels at, and their release, I, 330

Jones, J. M., II, 101

Jones, W. E., defeated and killed at Staunton, II, 477
INDEX

Jonesboro, Ga., Kilpatrick's raid at, II, 92; Howard moves to, 246; Sherman defeats Hood near, II, 424

Jonesboro, Miss., Rosecrans's pursuit through, I, 348

Jones's Bridge, Va., movements at, II, 177, 179-181

Jones's Landing, Va., Sheridan crosses the James near, II, 416

Juarez, Benito, President of Mexico, I, 42; assistance offered to, II, 359

Judah, Henry M., at capture of City of Mexico, I, 121

Kanawha River, Peter Grant drowned in, I, 3; movements on, in the rebellion, II, 58, 192, 195, 349, 411, 412, 416

Kansas, reinforcements from, I, 243; Price's raid toward, II, 427

Kautz, A. V., enters West Point from Georgetown, O., I, *18; defeats Hill, II, 133; operations against Virginia railroads, 133, 199, 405, 407, 414; operations against Petersburg and Richmond, 133, 156, 218, 410; defeated, Oct. 7, 1864, 235, 421, 422; raid on the Black Water, 407; actions at Stony Creek, 407, 415; crosses the James, 415; action, Sept. 29, 1864, 421

Kearny, Philip, wounded at Charnousco, I, 113; early acquaintance with, 153

Kearny, Stephen, at Jefferson Barracks, I, *25

Kelley, B. F., defects McCleland, II, *294, 295

Kelly, Rachel, I, 2

Kelly's Ferry, Tenn., operations etc., at, I, 506, 506, 517, 523, II, 29

Kenesaw Mountain, Ga., operations on, II, 86, 87, 429

Kentucky, the Grants in, I, 3; Ulysses' school life in, 8; visit to, 16; represented in Confederate Congress, 180; fails to pass ordinance of secession, 180; attempted neutrality of, 216; Grant's correspondence with the legislature of, 216; Halleck commanding in, 231; the Confederate disaster in, 297; possibilities of avoiding fighting for, 318; boundaries of Grant's district in, 326; fears of the invading line going beyond, 397; Grant's strength in, 349; army of defense of, 359; the Ninth Corps returned to, 485; Forrest's and Wheeler's operations in, II, 299, 296; Thomas to hold, 238; Morgan's raids in, 334, 425; activity of guerrillas in, 425; the enemy crosses the Cumberland into, 435

Kershaw, J. B., his command, II, 101; sent to reinforce Early, 121

Key West, Fla., Federal possession of, II, 54, 398

Kilpatrick, H. J., raid on the Macon railroad, II, 296

Kimball, Nathan, ordered to Mechanicsburg, I, *455

King, Maj., I, 18

King of the Tenn., possibility of enemy breaking through at, I, 517

Kingston, Ga., Sherman captures, II, 83, 151

Kinston, N. C., occupation of, II, 441

Knox, Gen., II, 106, *143

Know-nothing Party, Grant joins the, I, 169

Knoxville, Tenn., the Confederate line at, I, 139; possibilities of avoiding Burnside's imprisonment in, 318; proposal to abandon territory south and west of, 316; Longstreet threatens, 318; battle of, 323, II, 1; Bragg's designs concerning, 22; projected expeditions to, 19; reasons for the Confederate campaign against, 21; measures for relief of, 24; fears of Bragg's attacking, 25; relief expeditions to, 25-26, 38; destruction of Supply between Dalton and, 27; Wilson and Dana's journey from Chattanooga to, 28; Burnside obtains supplies in, 38, 29; its value to Bragg, 29, 30; raising of the siege at, 34; severe winter at, 34; Schofield's movement to, 83; Thomas ordered to concentrate stores at, 292, 415; Breckinridge's battles at Gillem at, 434

"Lafayette," the, running the batteries at Vicksburg, I, 396

Lagow, C. B., appointed aide-de-camp, I, *265; sole staff-officer at Jefferson City, II, 295

La Grange, Miss., speech of Jefferson Davis at, I, 175; journey from Corinth to Memphis through, 329, 321; abandonment of, 327; occupation of, 352; stores at, 335; retreat of, 187; Hatcher arrives in, 496; Grisson's raid from, 368

Lake Chicot, —, A. J. Smith's engagement near, II, 427

Lake Pontchartrain, proposed movement against, 38; balloon from, I, 484

Lake Providence, La., operations at, I, 370, 373-375, 389, 392, 464

Lake St. Joseph, I, 394

Lang, J. H., II, 102

Lauman, J. G., in siege of Vicksburg, I, 413, *448, 456

Lava Beds, Ore., Gen. Canby killed in the, II, 372

Law, E. M., II, 101

Lawler, M. K., in battle of Black River Bridge, I, 438, 440

Lawrence, Col., commanding at Columbus, Ky., II, 425; refuses to surrender the garrison, 425

Leasure, Daniel, II, 100

Lee, Gen. in the Vicksburg mine affair, II, *262; incompetency of, 362, 293

Lee, Fitz-Hugh, his command, II, 102; ordered to defense of the Valley, 133; at Thoroughfare Gap

Lee, Robert E., at Cerro Gordo, I, 100; Grant's acquaintance with, 151, II, 341, 342; personal and military characteristics, I, 152, II, 184, 185, 341, 342, 343; plans of campaign against, 33, 61-63, 73, 121, 127, 148, 168, 174, 199, 209, 218, 226, 275, 326, 327, 399, 401-403, 499, 440, 442, 443, 453; anticipations and fears of his movements, 62, 63, 66, 119, 121, 163, 216, 275, 291, 295, 308, 312-316, 326, 327, 338-340, 442, 446, 449; commanding the Army of Northern Virginia, *55, 101, 141, 399; situation on the Rapidan, 57, 399; capture of his army the great object of the Grand Campaign, 66, 71, 401, 440; Sheridan's operations against, 75-80, 133, 181, 333, 465, 530; surprised at the crossing of the Rappahannock; organization of his army, 101-104; headquarters at Orange Court House, 102; ignorance of true crossing of the Federal advance, 165, 124; orders Hilly, Ewell, and Longstreet to attack, 106; orders his troops to intrenchments at Mine Run, 106; endeavors to avoid battle on the right in the Wilderness, 110-115, 184, 405; loss of Longstreet a severe blow to, 112; assumes command in person, 112; withdraws within his intrenchments, 115; causes for movement by the left flank, 119, 120, 405; informs his government of the assumed retreat of the Army of the Potomac, 121; beams Grant to Spotsylvania, 121, 122; orders to Early, 124; informs his government that he is on Grant's flank, 124; crosses the Po at Wooden Bridge, 125; on the Cauharpin road, 126; in battle of Spotsylvania, 127-129, 134-145; Wright's operations against, 129, 141, 142, 147, 149; Warren's operations against, 129, 147, 149, 456; Burnside's operations against, 131, 132, 147; Hanneck's operations against, 136, 137, 141, 147, 405; roads and telegraphs cut between Richmond and, 141; defeats Hanneck and Wright, 141, 142; Stantoun a source of supplies for, 142; Pickett attempts to reinforce, 146; his opportunity to get between Richmond and, 147, 152 et seq., 405; confronts Warren and Wright at Jericho Ferry, 152; on the line at Ann, 150, 151; reinforcements for, 151; inactivity of, 151, 152; reported falling back on Richmond, 153; popular impression in the South concerning his operations, 152; position, May 26, 1864, 153; virtually whipped, 153, 154; feint of attack on left flank of, 155; telegraphs belated news to Richmond, 157; deceived by Grant, 158; on North Anna, 157; endeavoring to find his position, 158; position, May 26, 161; extent of his lines at Cold Harbor, 163, 166; extent of the battle of the Wilderness on, 167, 400, 410; correspondence with, regarding dead and wounded at Cold Harbor, 169-171; position near Richmond, 174; opportunity to crush Butler, 175; facilities for anticipating news, 171; favorable conditions for, 184; sends troops to Early and the Valley, 192, 193, 195, 209, 213, 412, 417; threatened attack by, 199; delay in bringing up troops at Petersburg mine, 201; drawing his troops to the north of the James, 204; importance of the Weldon railroad to, 211, 213; unsuccessful efforts to recapture the Weldon railroad, 211, 212; importance of the Shenandoah Valley to, 214; measures to prevent his reinforcing Early, 218; strength of his lines, 218; reinforces troops about Fort Glower, 219; Grant to watch him closely at Richmond, 257; sends troops against Sherman, 275, 289; held down by Grant at Richmond, 283; impossibility of his striking at Sherman, 251-283; his dotted lines from, and demoralization of, his army, 286, 291, 295, 299, 321, 325, 334, 335, 350, 351; attempt to unite with Johnston and crush Sherman, 316, 340; determines to assault the Union lines at Petersburg, 296; agrees with Pres. Davis to abandon Richmond and Petersburg, 296; plan of escape, 296; his avenue of escape, 353; loss in Gordon's attack, 323; menaces right, 368; inactivity of the South Side and Danville railroads to, 393, 394; personally superintends defense of his right flank, 396; frantic efforts to recover lost ground, 310, 311; attacks Parke, 311; hopes of capturing his flying army, 314-316, 326, 327; abandon Richmond, 316; orders his troops to assemble at Amelia Court House, 316; issues the general orders for movement of his army, 320; orders reinforcements from Danville to Farmville, 322, 323; intrenches at Amelia Court House, 323, 324, 433; in a life-and-death struggle, 324, 434; movement from Amelia Court House to Farmville, 325, 329; cuts off Washburn, 330; attempts to destroy bridge near High Bridge, 331; stopped by Washburn and Read, 331, 434; pursued by Humphreys, 331, 332; Ewell expresses hopes of his surrender, 333; correspondence and communications with, concerning surrender, 333, 345, 356, 357-359, 454-457; engagement at Appomattox Station, 356; chief of staff to Gen. Scott in Mexico, 341; contrasted with Grant, 341, 342; sword presented to, by the State of Virginia, 342; Grant's personal feeling for, 343-345; he is the fiction of two separate countries, 345; the fable of his sword at Appomattox, 346; paroling his army, 346; starving condition of his troops, 346; interior of State, April 10, 1865, 348; influence of, 348, 437; number of troops surrendered by, 353; Lee, S. D., with Hoad at Franklin, II, 254; Lee, W. H. F., II, 104; Leggett, M. D., repulses the enemy at Bolivar, I, 332; promoted brigadier-general, 350; mining at Vicksburg, 460-462; Leonard, Sargent, T., author of the "Let-alone policy," the, II, 398; Lever, Charles, Grant's fondness for works of, I, 20; Lewisburg, W. Va., Crook to take, II, 403; Lexington, Ky., horseback journey from Knoxville to, II, 34; Burbridge returns to, 434; Lexington, Mo., threatened by Price, I, 208; Grant ordered to secure cash from banks in, 200; Lexington, Va., Hunter's movements near, II, 195, 412; "Lexington," the action on the Tennessee River, I, 240; at Pittsburg Landing, 385; Lick Creek, its course, and movements on, I, 279-284; Lieutenant-General, the office restored by Congress, II, 44; Grant commissioned, 44, 45; the military situation at time of Grant's commission, 53 et seq.; Lincoln, Abraham, election of, I, 171-173; secret journey to Washington, 182; inauguration, 183; calls for 75,000 troops, 183; anecdotes of, 186, II, 68, 246, 269, 377, 378; second call for troops, I, 194; constant hope for the Union, 327; congratulates Grant on success at Corinth, 349; authorizes McClellan to command expedition against Vicksburg, 353; Mississippi River experience, 372; supports Grant, 385, 384; effect of Gettysburg and Vicksburg on, 475; desires to gain foothold in Texas, 484; alarmed at results of Chickamauga, 488; concern for the loyalists of East Tennessee, 53; anxiety for Murfreesville and Knoxville, 515, 516, 523, II, 11, 224, 92; congratulations from, on operations of November 24, 1863, 10, 11; nominations of W. F. Smith for promotion, 31; informed of the raising of the siege of Knoxville, 31; letter of thanks from, 32; presents Grant a second commission as lieutenant general, 44, 45; debates with Douglas, 50; Grant's first meeting with, 50, 52; his military ability, 50-52; supports Sheridan for command of cavalry, 60; conferences with, 66-68; quaint phraseology of, 68; despatch to Grant, Aug. 3, 1864, 206; anxiety for Sheridan's safety, 217, 218; reassuring Grant, 293; asks for comfort from Grant, regarding Sherman, 245, 246; sums up Sherman's position, 246; anxiety as to propriety of Sherman's cutting loose from his base, 233; Grant telegraphs failure of Port Fisher expedition to, 267; notified of the arrival of the Peace Commissioners, 267; interview with the Peace Commissioners, 267, 299, 363; his terms of peace, 299, 363; personal characteristics, 299, 319, 358, 380, 381; characterization of A. H. Stephens, 299; at City Point, 289, 299, 308, 319, 377, 328, 363; successes at Petersburg, 306; informed of capture of outer works of Petersburg, 310; invited to visit Petersburg, 315, 318; congratulates Grant, 319; visit of, 323-326; at Richmond, 335, 336, 363; interview with Weitzel at Richmond, 355; difference with Stanton concerning the calling of the Vir ginia secession convention, 355, 356; and Mrs. Grant to attend Ford's Theater, 357; the invitation declined, 357; assassination of, 358, 363; effects of his assassination, 358; going with Grant to Richmond, 363; feeling in regard to Jefferson Davis, 369, 378; his death a national loss, 369; contrasted with Stanton, 389, 381
INDEX

489

Little Cabin's ford, crossing the, I, 62, 63

Littlepage's Bridge and Ford, Va., II, 155, 156

Little River, movements at, I, 113, 155

Little Rock, Ark. Bridge, II, 353, 449

Logan, John A., Grant's first meeting with, I, 195-197; personal characteristics, military ability, etc., 276, 416, 499, II, 235, 259; his loyalty suspected, I, 196; patriotic speech by, 196; his district in Illinois, 196-198; addresses the 21st Illinois, 197; raises troops, 197; proposes to enter Corinth, 314; personnel of his command, 393; at Bruxburg, 401; in battle of Port Gibson, 403; to repair bridge at North Fork of Bayou Pierre, 406; reinforces McPherson, 409; ordered toward Grand Gulf, 409; in battle of Jackson, 422; at Bolton, 426; in battle of Champion's Hill, 432, 435, 436; enlists a colored man in his service at Vicksburg, 450; at meeting between Pemberton and Grant, 467; his division first to enter Vicksburg, 472; ordered to threaten J. E. Johnston, II, 2; assigned to command the Fifteenth Corps, 48; succeeds McPherson in command of Army of the Tennessee, 89, 235, 423; report of losses at Atlanta, 89; assaults on, at Atlanta, 90; commanding the Fifteenth Corps, 241; quits the field for political purposes, 231; dilatory ness in returning to his command, 235; superseded by Howard, 235, 423; aggrieved at Howard's transfer, 235; visits Grant at City Point, 259; ordered conditionally to relieve Thomas, 259

Lomax, L. L., II, 192

Long, A. L., II, 163

Long Bridge, Va., movements at, II, 179-181, 410

Longstreet, James, attacks George at Wannikiehie, I, 508; position on Chattanooga Creek, 510; moves against Burnside, 516-518, II, 25, 29, 30; at Loudon, I, 518; threatens Knoxville, 518; plan to cut him off from the south, 518; perils of enveloping, 524, 527; reinforces men sent to, operations, 42, 43; Grant's personal acquaintance with, 21; difference between Bragg and, 21; personal characteristics, 22; to be driven from Chattanooga, 24; induction for, 28; pursuit of, by Burnside, 32; winters in East Tennessee, 32; proposal to drive him out of Tennessee, 37, 43; pursuit of, abandoned, 43; checks Schofield's movements, 44; ordered to attack the Orange plank road, 106; at Gordonsville, 106; en route to reinforce Hill, 109; in the battle of the Wilderness, 110, 112; wounded, 112; issued order of pursuit to Lee, 112; his corps ordered to Spottsylvania, 121; intention to join Early in crushing Sheridan, 122; supports Lee's right, 310; appears helpless to oversee the paroling of Lee's army, 347

Long Wharf, San Francisco, III, 159, 163

Lookout Creek, I, 502, 11, 8

Lookout Mountain, Tenn. Secessionists abandon, I, 494; Bragg's position on, 484, 485, 503, 506, 508, II, 30; reoccupying near, I, 501; junction of the Tennessee with Chattanoog a, I, 501; engagements around, 501-503; reinforcements sent to, operations, on, 517, 519, 522, II, 8-10, 23, 383; Sherman's crossing of the Tennessee in view of, I, 521; deception of the enemy on, 523; the clouds on, II, 2; physical features of, 8; battle of, 8-10; evaded by the enemy, 14

Lookout Valley, Confederate lines at, I, 503; gaining a footing in, 506; the Tennessee opened from Bridgeport to, 505; comparative advantages of the Union and Confederate forces in, 506; losses in securing possession of, 509; deceiving the enemy with regard to movements in, 512; to be defended by George, 519; plan of Hooker's movement to Chattanooga Valley from, 520; key to the line of supplies, 521; commanded by Missionary Ridge, 521; Hooker's position in, 521

Loomis, - excellence as an accountant, 1, 187

Loomis, John M., in battle of Chattanooga, II, 113

Loring, W. W., delayed at Port Gibson, I, 502; effect of battle of Champion's Hill on, 485

"Lost cause," the, I, 132

Lost Mountain, Ga., J. E. Johnston at, II, 423

Louderon, Col. c, I, 18

Loudon, Tenn., Longstreet at, I, 516, 518

Louisiana Court House, Va., Sheridan destroys the railroad at, II, 414

Louisiana, with the Army of Observation in III, 100; cession of, 183; Union holdings in, 5, 33, 398; Banks defeated in, 142; Grant proposes that troops in, move against Mobile, 233; in the hands of the enemy, 398
INDEX

Louisiana Purchase, no claim to the right of secession, I, 174
Louisville, Ga., Sherman's movement via, II, 245
Louisville, Ky., early visits to, I, 9, 16; Buell's headquarters at, 233; National troops at, 265; Grant at, 392-393; Sheridan at, 333; Buell's march to, 334; meeting with Stanton at, 400, 401, 406; Grant leaves, for the front, 407; Thomas advised to call for a force to go to, II, 228; Stoneman in, 294
"Louisville," the, at Fort Donelson, I, 247; running the batteries at Vicksburg, 386
Lovejoy's, Ga., Sherman defeats Hood near, II, 424
Lovell, Mansfield, commanding at New Orleans, I, 142; excursion in Mexico, 142 et seq.; joins Van Dorn in attack on Corinth, 341
Luther, Roland A., wounded at Palo Alto, I, 69
Lynchburg, plans for Ord's operations toward, II, 61; Sheridan's operations toward, and near, 77, 278, 283, 291, 444, 445; Hurlbut's operations toward, at, and near, 192, 195, 176, 194, 135, 411, 412, 416; importance of, 176, 409; Early's movements at, 195, 429; proposed plan of campaign toward, for spring of 1865, 226; Thomas ordered to move toward, 231, 282, 456; road between Petersburg and, 282; Stoneman's movements against, 395, 396, 422, 446, 455; evacuation of, 367; Lee's troops beat Hunter to, 412; possibilities of Lee's falling back to, 412; destruction of railroad near, 445
Lynchburg and Petersburg road, proposal to capture the, II, 231, 238. See also SOUTH SIDE RAILROAD Lyons, Nathaniel, energetic work by, at St. Louis and Camp Jackson, I, 188
McAllister, Robert, II, 97
McArthur, John, at Corinth, I, 305; in battle of Champion's Hill, 433; in siege of Vicksburg, 448
McBirney, David B., II, 97
McCall, George A., Grant's service in the company of, Fourth Infantry, I, 94; character, 54; kindness rendered by, 60, 61; at Resaca de la Palma, 70; early acquaintance with, 151
McCandless, William, his command, II, 98; recommended for brigadier-generalship, U. S. Vols., 139
McCausland, John, burns Chambersburg, II, 204; defeated by Gen. Kelley, 204
McClellan, George B., at Cerro Gordo, I, 101; Grant's acquaintance with, *193; appointed major-general, 193; orders from, 283; delay in communication with, 268; correspondence with Halleck concerning operations in the West, 293; orders arrest of Grant, 293; nominated by the press as Grant's successor, 382; question of his restoration to duty, II, 48
McClellan, Moody, & Hilley, I, 205
McClelland, J. A., first meeting with, I, 195-197; addresses the 21st Illinois, 197; loyalty of, 197; ordered into west Kentucky, 294; commanding expedition on the Tennessee, 293; at Port Donelson, 244-246, 250, 251, 258; promoted major-general of volunteers, 260; commanding division of Army of the Tennessee, 274; quality of his troops, 279; at Pittsburg Landing, 279; prairie expedition, 282; at Shiloh, 284, 291; 390, 397; recruiting expedition at the North, 349, 350; rumored separate command for, 353; fears of his assuming command, 359-369; expedition against Vicksburg, 358, 359; a command provided for, 360; failure of Grant's despatch to reach, 364; assumes command of Sherman's troops, 365, 366; reaches the mouth on the Yazoo, 365; approves the attack on Arkansas Post, 366; returns to Napoleon, 366; difficulty about, 367; visit to, at Napoleon, 367; ordered to Young's Point, 367; insubordination of, 365; character and political affiliations, 368; excavation work at Young's Point, 373; nominated by the press as Grant's successor, 382; at New Carthage, 388, 389; discovers route from Smith's plantation to Perkins's plantation, 389; bridge-building by, 389; commanding right wing of the Army of the Tennessee, 390; at Hard Times, 394; at Port Gibson, 402-404; to hold Hankinson's Ferry, 409; plan to send him to Port Hudson, 410; a waiting supplies, 412; orders to, for attack on Grand Gulf, 356, 358; lands at Grand Gulf, 400; commanding the Thirteenth Corps, 401, in the Big Black, 412, 414, 415; at Edward's Station, 420, 427, 428; at Big Sandy, Five Mile Creek, and Rocky Spring, 413; at Fourteen-Mile Creek, 413-415; ordered to Clinton, Mississippi Springs, and Raymond, 420; joined by Blair, 423; moves on Bolton, 425, 426; Blair's command turned over to, 425; orders to, regarding movements of troops, 426; in battle of Champion's Hill, 429, 431, 432, 434, 435; in battle of Black River Bridge, 438; in siege of Vicksburg, 442-445, 448, 450; complaints concerning his con- gratulatory order, 457; relieved from duty and ordered to Springfield, 457
McCook, A. McD., at Shiloh, I, 187, 188, 298; comment on article in "Century Magazine" regarding, 299; retreats to Chattanooga, 494; question of his restoration to duty, II, 48
McCook, E. M., raid toward Macon, II, 91, 424
McCook family, the, I, 299
McCreery, R., excused from engineer duty at Vicksburg, I, 150
McCowan, Samuel, II, 102
McIntosh, J. S., wounded at Resaca de la Palma, I, 71
Mackenzie, R. S., in battle of White Oak Road, II, 299; attacks the enemy near the Appomattox, 325; military career, *385; movement to Hatcher's Run, 450; at Dinwiddie Court House, 452; designated to receive paroles of Lee's army, 457
McKenzie, Samuel, commanding assaulting column at Chapultepec, I, 120
McLean, Wilmer, owner of house at Appomattox where Lee surrendered, II, 346, 348, 349
McMinnville, Tenn., Wheeler at, II, 424
Macon, Tenn., Hitch destroys the railroad between Columbus and, I, 408 Macon, Ga., Stoneman's raid toward, II, 90-92; Kilpatrick's raid toward, 92; Pres. Davis's speech at, 227-230, 428, 429; Sherman threatens, 231, 332, 342, 431; captured by Wilson, 308, 459
INDEX
491

McPherson, J. B., report on question of intrenching at Highsburg Landing, I, 274, 295; at Shiloh, 276, 278, 291, 292, 295; reinforces Rosecrans at Corinth, 316; promoted major-general, 350; commanding left wing, Army of Tennessee, 372; pursues the enemy beyond Oxford, 356; operations at Lake Providence, 376, 373-375; commanding center of the Army of the Tennessee, 390; advance upon New Carthage, 392; coordinates with Mc-Clernand at Grand Gulf, 395; advances to Hard Times, 395, 400; at Brinnsburg, 400, 401; supports McClernand at Port Gibson, 402, 405; on the west bank of the Missis- sipi, 406; seizes Hankinson's Ferry, 409; operations at the Big Black River, 412, 413, 439, 441; at Rocky Springs and Uteia, 413; at Raymond, 415-416; moves on Jackson, 415, 420; in battle of Jackson, 424-425; moves on Clinton, 419, 420; moves on Bolton, 425, 426; at Champion's Hill, 428, 423, 431-433; in siege of Vicksburg, 442, 443, 448; succeeds in favor of McClernand, 445; complains of McClernand's conduct; order, 437; at meeting between Pemberton and Grant, 467; ordered to Memphis, 466; ordered to reinforce Rosecrans, 494; ordered to send locomotives to Dodge, 514; commanding in Vicksburg, II, 39; commanding Department of the Tennessee, 55; stereo of army, 59; at Hunts- ville, 82; movement from Chattanooga to Dalton, 83, 84, 422; sent around by Snake Creek (Gap), 85, 422, 423; surprises Johnston, 85; killed sent to reinforce army, 86; succeed- ed by Logan, 235; in battle of Dallas, 423; unsuccessful assault on Kenesaw Mountain, 432
McRae, D., 11, 102
McAfee, William, 11, 102
Manchester, Eng., the cotton famine in II, 302
Manchester, Va., Sherman's troops in camp at II, 371
Manitou Springs, Colo., meeting with Gen. W. H. Jackson at 1, 323
Mansfield, J. K. E., examines defenses of Monterreys, I, 90; early acquaintance with, 152
Manual labor, Grant's early experience at, 1, 12
March to the sea, commencement of the, II, 240. See also ATLANTA; GEORGIA; SA-VANNAH; SHERMAN.
Mareas, William L., Secretary of War under Polk, 1, 90; difficulties concerning Scott's appointment, 90
Marietta, Ga., Johnston fails back to, 11, 86
Marin, Mex., Taylor's troops at, 1, 79
Marine Brigade, expedition to Haines's Bluff, I, 445
Marion, Va., defeat of Vaughn at, II, 434
Markland, A. H., in charge of mails to Sherman at Savannah, II, 249
Marieu's Mills, Arkansas Landing, I, 274
Marriott, Capt., Grant's fondness for works of, II, 20
Marshall, C. C., commanding at Jackson, I, 99; promoted brevet-major-general, 350
Marshall, Col., 1, 18
Marshall, Charles, with Lee at Appomattox, II, 340
Marshall, Elisha G., II, 100
Martindale, J. H., in battle of Cold Harbor, 11, 167
Martinsburg, W., Va., Early at, II, 216, 416
Maryland, represented in Confederate Congress, 1, 188; fails to pass Ordinance of secession; fails to be invaded by the Army of Northern Virginia, 356; fear of the invading line going north of, 357; exposure to raids and incursions into, II, 265, 463; 419; free from Confederate invasion, 266, 299
Maryland Heights, Md., Weber occupies, 11, 416
"Mary Martin," the, the Confederate Peace Commissioners lodged on, II, 287
Mason, Rodney, supposed cowardice at Williams, 1, 230; surrenders Charleston, 339, 333
Massachusetts, the Grant family in I, 1
Mat River, the, II, 126
Matamoras, Mex., movements toward, and evacuation of, 375-377
Mathematics, Grant's fondness for, I, 20; preparing for a professorship in, 30; 31
Matoakas, the, river, Sheridan at, II, 79; its component streams, 197
Mauldin, W., ministering in the 21st Illinois at, 1, 190
Maynardville, Tenn., Wilcox at, I, 521
Mayville, Ky., Peter Grant settles in, I, 3; Jesse Grant in 3; Grant's school life in, 8; early visits to, 9
Meade, George G., at battle of Monterey, I, 82; former acquaintance with, II, 415; commanding Army of the Potomac, 46, 47, 61, 67, 399, 466; visit to, at Brandy Station, 46, 47; patriotic offer of, 46, 47; position after Grant's promotion, 47; personal and military characteristics, 47, 139, 232, 383, 384, 494; letters to: (Apr. 9, 1864) 61-63, (May 7) 112, 129, (May 11) 134, (May 18) 145, (May 22) 148, (May 25) 144, (May 30) 150, (June 3) 165, 168, (June 11) 180, (July 24) 260, (Mar. 24, 1865) 474, 448; instructions to, for spring campaign, 1864, 61-63; ordered to advance, 65; Sheridan's capture of, 1864, 71; correspondence between Grant and, 69, 70; orders for Sheridan's raid passed through, 77; orders issued through, for advance on May 8, 1864, 106; headquarters at Old Wilderness Tavern, 107; orders Gettys to attack in the Wilderness, 108; obtains modification of orders for May 6, 109; orders to, for movement to the left flank, 110, 126; a right ride with, 126, 123; narrow escape from capture, 121; tells Sheridan's plans for capture of Spottsylvania, 128; at battle of Spottsylvania, 135; orders to, for attack May 12, 1864, 134; ordered to relieve Warren from command, 137; puts Warren under Humphreys's orders, 138; recommended for major-generalship, U. S. A., 139; ordered to, for movement to draw Lee from his intrenchments, 145; orders to, for movement of troops, May 23, 148; orders to, for movement of troops May 29; at Headquarters Neutral, south of the North Anna, 154; orders to, for corps commanders to follow up advantages, 165; instructions to, concerning successful and unsuccessful assaults at Cold Harbor, 165; orders to, after assaults at Cold Harbor, 165; or-ordered to fortify along the Chickahominy, 173; instructions to, concerning movements across the Chickahominy and James, 180; ordered to supply Hancock with pontoons before Chickahominy, 178; ordered to supply Hancock with pontoons over the James, 187; informed of instructions given to Butler, 187; succeeds Hancock in temporary command, 188; operations at Petersburg, 198; approved the mine at Petersburg, 198; instructions to, concerning assault on Petersburg, 200; prepares orders for assault on Petersburg, 201; prohibits Burnside's empley from crossed the mine at the mine, 200; commanding operations at Petersburg, 200; enters the outer works, 340; enters Petersburg, 314; fails to capture the Welton railroad, 320; ordered to, for the defense of Washington, 186; warned to expect attack from Lee, 199; instructed to raid the Welton railroad, 204; the order rescinded, 201; instructed to feint on the extreme left, 219; to attack, 212; fails to capture the South Side railroad, 253; proposed plan of campaign for, in spring of 1863, 252; cut off from communication with his headquarters, 297; tries to hasten Warren, 303; statement of a so-called engineer of the Army of Northern Virginia, 312, 317; military for the defense of, 315; to move out on the Danville road, 316; to make forced march, 322, 333; sick, 323; 325; Grant joins, 326, 455; progress of, 324; prevents Sheridan from attacking, 325; at Petersburg, 325, 454; mistaken plan of, 326, 327; near High Bridge, 333; Lee asks him for suspension of hostilities, 338; ordered to move to the Potomac into camp at Burkeville, 362; receives letter from Gov. Smith, 377; in the grand review at Washington, 378, 379; Lee's army his objective point, 361; to move from Culpeper in union with Butler, 402; Grant's intention to put him south of the James, 403; Burnside's corps added to his command, 405; orders attack along the whole line at Hanover Court House, 406; reports of, 410; sends out reconnaissances, Sept. 30, 1864, 421; instructions to, for spring campaign, March 24, 1865, 447, 448; action at Fort Stedman, 449; reports position on the Boydton road, 452; sends troops to Sutherland's Station, 453; reaches Amelia Court House, 453; engagements with Lee's rear-guard, 455

Meadow Bluffs, W. Va., Crook and Averell at, 72. 73

Meadow Bridge, Va., Sheridan burns at, 72; road to Richmond Via, 157; Sheridan crosses the Chickahominy at, 406

Measles, fatality of, among Indians, 163

Mechanicsburg, Miss., Kinball's brigade sent to, 117

Mechanicosville, Va., movements at, 71, 75, 157-159, 161

Medon, Tenn., attack of guerrillas at, 1, 322.

M. Dennis defeats the enemy near, 332

Merex, Tenn., possibility of capture of, after the fall of Fort Donelson, 1, 261; railroad communications with the South and East, 272; the Confederate line at, 304; never given up, 314; Grant removes headquarters to, 312-326, 355, 367; the journey from Corinth to, 319-323; Southern hospitality near, 321-323; Southern patriotism in, 323-325; a church in, "defiled" by Union troops, 324; complaints and requests in, 324, 325; threatened by Van Dorn, 327; Van Dorn endeavors to strike the Mississippi above, 315; difficulties of reinforcing, 328; Sherman commanding at, 327, 457; reinforcements from Bigelow from, 1, 330; Grant's strength in, 319; holding the Mississippi River at, 329; reinforcements for, 356; transportation for Sherman's army from, 357; proposed movements from, 358; strategic value of, 359; expulsion of alleged rebel from, 425; Sherman's proposed retreat to, 454; troops sent to, 457, 466; Sherman starts for Corinth from, 411; difficulty of procuring supplies at, 512; Hurlbut commanding in, 39; the limit of the right wing of the united armies, 56; Sturges driven back to, by Forrest, 424; A. J. Smith at, 424, 425; troops sent against Price from, 427; Grier son's expedition from, 454

Memphis and Nashville railroad, A. J. Smith ordered to prevent Forrest from getting to the Tennessee, 53, 428

Memphis and Ohio railroad, destruction of bridge over the Tennessee, 1, 240; Sherman's position on the, 335

Meridian, Miss., occupied by Polk, II, 39, 40; Sherman's movement against, 39-41

Merritt, Wesley, his command, II, 99; ordered away from the Po bridge by Mcade, 112; chief of cavalry with Sheridan, 294; at Five Forks, 307; drives Confederate cavalry to the Appomattox, 312; strikes the enemy at Deep Bottom, 322; attacks the enemy in flank, 325; appointed to oversee the paroling of Lee's army, 347; crosses the Rannymuck, 408

Mersy, Augustus, in battle of Atlanta, II, 89

Mexican laws, origin of, 1, 43

Mexican war, its origin, iniquity, conduct, and results, I, 32-34, 90, 115, 127, 130, 133, 136, 170; personnel of the U. S. army in the, 44, 72, 130; equipment, transportation, etc., in, 44, 68, 69; outbreak of, 62, 64, 66, 72; difficulty of obtaining troops for, 165; generalship of, 128, 129; victories in, 130; personnel of the Mexican army, 131; treaty of peces, 134, 135, 132; value of experience in, 131-132; Pillow's pride in his service in, 254; old acquaintances in, II, 46; acquaintance with Lee in, 341, 342; Sedgwick in, 384

Mexico, menacing, I, 32; grants permission for colonization of Texas, 32, 33; slavery forbidden by constitution of, 38; war with Texas, 33, 49; non-recognition of Texan independence by, 33; smuggling in, 42; use of cigarettes in, 42; tobacco trade, 42, 44; Spanish restrictions on trade of, 43; provoking the war with, 43; nightmarches in, 76, 77; the army of, in 1848, 131; patriotism in, 131; the modern army of, 131; celebration of national defeats in, 131; Scott's preparations for prolonged occupation, 132, 133; temporary government, 131; diversity of peace with, 134, 137, 152; national amnesties
INDEX
493
137-140; gambling, 140, 148; trip to the great coves of, 145-150; the poons of, 148; evacuation of, by U. S. troops, 152; service with the 6th Michigan Regiment, 1, 51. *See 211, the Imperial scheme in, 388-390; fall of the Empire in, 390; the territory acquired from, 393-395; Confederate refugees in,

Mexico, City of, Mexico, its situation and approaches, I, 76, 98, 108, 116, 117, 127, 128; Philip Kearny at the gates of, 113; violations of law in, 115; a stadium of, 116, 117, 124, 122; defenses, 117; Santa Anna evacuates, 124; ceded to Gen. Scott, 125; liberation of convicts in, 124, 125; entry into, 125-127; Gen. Scott's government of, 127; prohibition of bull-fights near, 139; evacuation of, by U. S. troops, 132

Mexico, Mo., Grant ordered to, 1, 201; restoring order in, 202; Pope's headquarters at, 202; studying tactics in, 203, 204

"Miami," the, disabled at Plymouth, 11, 407

Michigan, ratification of the Constitution of, I, 153; question of Grant's citizenship in, 153

Middle Department, necessity of a supreme commander in the, 11, 473; merged in the N. C. Division, 487

Middle Military Division, formation of, I, 419; Sheridan assigned to temporary command of the, 419; dismantled cavalry of, 426; succeeds to command in, 447

Middletown, Va., rallying of Sheridan's troops near, II, 420

Miles, Nelson A., his command, II, 97; in battle of Honey Grove, 290; at Eastport, 487; reenforces Sheridan at Five Forks, 492; returned to Humphreys's command, 493

Milford, Va., operations at, II, 146-149

Military Division of the Mississippi, creation of the Department of the, I, 191; Grant assumes command of, 197; W. F. Smith appointed chief engineer, II, 47; McClellan assumes command of the, 48, 54, 399; the proper plans for the, 48, 49; operations in, 227; limits, 399; Canby in command, 427

"Military Orders," Lincoln's, II, 51

Military tactics, change in, since the Mexican war, I, 130

Milledgeville, Ga., Sherman's operations against, II, 231, 232, 240, 241, 244; flight of the governor and legislature from, 244; mock legislature sits at, 246; Sherman's march to Millen from, 246, 247

Milledge, Ga., Sherman's march to, II, 246, 247

Miliken's Bend, La., McClellan ordered to, I, 367; new waterway project started at, 380, 381; concentration at, 384; Grant's return to, 399; issuance of Special Orders, 99. No. 116, from, 390-392; F. P. Blair at, 412; troops sent to, 413; Taylor's attack on, 455; behavior of colored troops at, 456

Mill Springs, Ky., battle of, I, 292, 294, 265, 367

Mine Run, Va., Lee's position at, II, 106, 399; Fifth Corps meets the enemy near, 404

Mining, in the United States, II, 366, 394

Mississippi, passing of, I, 285, 417

Missionary Ridge, Tenn., positions, movements, engagements, etc., on, I, 194, 502, 503, 505, 515, 516, 520-522, 523, 11, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, 15-17, 28, 30

Mississippi, secession of, I, 133; end of Johnston's career in, 267; possibilities of bloodless captures of points in, 318; proposals to surrender in, 329; evacuation of the, 337; evacuation of, by U. S. troops, 338; applied to, 339; supply lines in, 362; topography of, 402, 403, 414; Grierson's raid through, 408; J. E. Johnston assumes command in, 419; destruction of the capital, 436 (see also Richmond); character of the country for military operations, 471; Sherman ordered to drive Johnston from, 473, 475, 483; importance of capturing the capital, 476 (see also Richmond); Pope's evacuation of, 482; peace feeling in, 486; Forrest in, II, 197, 274, 399, 421; Thomas ordered to send a cavalry force into, 278

Mississippi Central railroad, operations on the, I, 537, 335, 344, 345, 352, 355, 367, II, 431, 434

Mississippi River, its character, courses, and navigations, I, 67, 368-372, 382, 392, 394, 401; Union movements, positions, etc., on, 211, 219, 317, 343, 350, 352, 357, 390, 447, 463, 461, 475, 476, 478, 486; II, 3, 39, 53, 58, 322, 319, 389, 399, 429; Confederate movements, positions, etc., on, I, 236, 240, 321, 329, 345, 374, 449, 463, 464, II, 385, 399; closed to navigation below Cairo, I, 235; capture of Island No. 10, 307; its importance, 317, 301, II, 385; Vicksburg the only obstacle to free navigation of, 331; employing negroes as woodcutters on, 334; rumored movement by McClellan against Vicksburg, II, 355; McClellan assigned to command expedition on, 399; terrors of the lowlands, 382; the writer of 1862-63 on, 370; fortifications and situation of Vicksburg, II, 385; Confederate forces east of, 399; the Confederacy cut in two by Union victory east of, 429; Pope's movements east of, 426; final surrender of Confederates east and west of, 459

Mississippi Springs, Miss., movements at, I, 439, 452

Mississippi Valley, railroad system of the, I, 272; operations of western armies in, II, 460

Missouri, represented in Confederate Congress, I, 180; fails to pass ordinance of secession, 180; the rebellion spirit in, 180; dubious character of the State government, 188; Pope commanding in, 301, 302; Price's raids in, 298, 305, II, 447, 428; dangers to Union men in, I, 300; Grant assigned to command district of Southeast, 214; Jeff. Thompson's operations in, 211, 213, 214; Grant assumes command of his district, 213, 214; Fremont moves against Price, 218; Sheridan's service in, 333, 334; sending troops to Schofield in, 485; troops sent to Banks from, II, 58, 409; A. J. Smith's operations in, 238; A. J. Smith reenforces Thomas from, 236; guerrilla warfare in, 398

Missouri River, Price's operations on the, II, 127
INDEX

Mitchell, Ormsby M., arrives at Nashville, I, 296

Mobile, Ala., Grant's favorite scheme of a campaign against, I, 184, 485, 492, 493, II, 344, 54, 91, 196, 238-241, 367, 426; Bragg's movement to Chattanooga, viz., I, 329; J. E. Johnston moves troops toward, II, 42; Banks's movements against, 58, 61, 400, 491; Sherman's movement to secure the railroad between Chattanooga and, 61; Union control of, 290, 292; Canby's movements against of, 232, 231, 277, 273, 366, 367, 431, 412, 443, 446, 458; proposed movement on, by Shafter, 233, 234; evacuation of, 367, 468

Mobile and Ohio railroad, movements, positions, etc., on the, I, 253, 289, 366, 399, 314, 326, 327, 335, 345, 352, II, 429, 434

Mobile Bay, Union possession of part of, II, 290; Farragut's operations in, 297; Canby's movements against Mobile from, 442-444, 458

Modoc Indians, Gen. Canby killed by, II, 372

Molino del Rey, Mex., situation, I, 116; battle of, 117-120; Mexican celebration of the, 131

Monocacy River, the, Wallace's defeat at I, 196, 197, 416; Grant visits Hunter at, 207, 418, 419; meeting of Grant and Sheridan at, 208, 418

Monopolistic Mexico, I, 42-44

Monte, a national game in Mexico, I, 140, 148

Monterey, Mex., its situation, approaches, and defenses, I, 76, 79, 164; advance on, 76, 79; battle of, 82-88; after the surrender, 88, 89; relieving the post fund at, 141, 142

Monterey, Tenn., movements at, I, 398, 313

Monterey, William L. M., bearer of Pemberton's proposals at Vicksburg, I, 465

Montgomery, Ala., the Confederate capital, I, 181; Canby's movements against, II, 274, 277-279, 444; captured by Wilson, 308, 459; Steele's raid toward, 438

Montgomery Co., Pa., the Simpson family in, I, 5, 6

Moon Lake, Miss., proposed route through, I, 375

Morales, Gen., surrenders Vera Cruz, I, 97

Morgan, J. D., ordered to Chattanooga and Nashville, II, 233

Morgan, John H., raids of, I, 17, II, 354, 425; killed, 435

Morganza, La., Banks reaches, II, 436

Morris, Thomas, influences appointment to West Point, I, 14-15

Morris, W. H., II, 39

Morris Island, S. C., Federal possession of, I, 53, 258

Morrisson, William, wounded at Fort Donelson, I, 240

Morristown, Tenn., Breckinridge defeats Gillen near, II, 481

Morton, Miss., Sherman reaches, II, 41

Mosby, John S., narrowly misses capturing Grant, II, 67; personal characteristics, 67; operations in rear of the Army of Potomac, 67; Sheridan to look after, 444

Moscow, Pres. Davis sends Sherman's position to Napoleon's retreat from, II, 290

Mott, Gershom, his command, II, 97; in battles in the Wilderness, 108, 112, 113; at Todd's Tavern, *128; in battle of Spotsylvania, 123-129, 134, 135; skirmishing, May 13, 1864, 138; reduction of his division to a brigade, 139; his brigade assigned to Birney's command, 139

Mound City, Ill., proposal to send the gunboats to, I, 290; Grant's strength south of, 349

"Mound City," the running the batteries at Vicksburg, I, 308

Mount Albans, Va., 1, 442

Mount Crawford, Va., Sheridan secures bridge at, II, 447

Mount Jackson, Sherman pursues Early to, II, 215, 429

Mount Pleasant, Tenn., Forrest moves toward, II, 428

Mower, J. A., promoted brigadier-general, I, 250; repulses Taylor's attack on Tennessee Bayou, 336

Mules, Mexican, I, 42, 46, 54-57, 77, 78; death on the Mississippi, 153, 156

Mulligan, James A., commanding at Jefferson City, I, 298

Murfreesboro, Tenn., Rosecrans confronts Bragg at, I, 462; garrisoned by Thomas, II, 238, 256; Wheeler at, 421

Murphy, Pvt. W. C., Revolcates Luka, I, 337, 361; disgraceful surrender of Holly Springs by, 369, 361; dismissed from the army, 369; treacherous conduct of, 361, 362

Muscatatuck, Ala., movements at, I, 233, 512; II, 239, 254

Musket, superiority of Confederate, I, 479

Mutiny, on board the "Suviah," I, 10

Napoleon L., Pres. Davis signs Sherman to, II, 289; Grant's opinion of, 320, 391

Napoleon III., his vanity and overtnow, I, 390, 391

Napoleon, Ark., McClemand at, I, 396; visit to McClemand at, 367

Nashville, Tenn., situation, approaches, etc., I, 239, 263; strategic importance, 232, 292, 354, 355; A. S. Johnston at, 254, 256; escape of Floyd and Pillow to, 254; proposal to take, 262; Nelson's and Buell's advance on, 232; destruction of railroad bridge at, 292, 396; arrival of Mitchell at, 292; Grant at, 263, 275, II, 32-36; Buell's alarm concerning, 264, 265; abandoned by Johnston, 267; complaints about Grant's visit to, 269; reasons for occupying, 269; Buell's advance to Pittsburgh Landing from, 274; capture of, 394; garrisoned by Union troops, 317, 327; fears for, 336; Hallock suggests that Grant go to, 488, 491; meeting with Andrew Johnson at, 497; a trying time at, 497; fears of Confederate movement toward, 512, 515; rebuilding the railroad from Decatur to, 513-515; railroad supplies sent to, 514, 515; trip to Chattanooga from, II, 31; troubles of the telegraph operator at, 36, 37; Sherman ordered to send troops to, 39; meeting with Sherman at, 47, 48; trip to Cincinnati from, 48; Sherman assumes duties at, 81; recruits sent to Sherman at, 233; Thomas at, 233, 239, 256, 295, 429, 431-433; Schofield at, 254-256, 433; guarding the road to Chattanooga from, 256; Hood's movement against, and siege of, 256, 257, 340, 422, 432, 440; freezing weather at, 256; Thomsen advised not to let Hood remain about, 257; Grant orders to go to, 125, 238, 239; Logan ordered to, 239; battle of, 259, 260, 433; Sherman advised of the battle of, 275;
Sherman and Grant disapprove Thomas's action at, 276; Sherman's dependence on, for supplies, 424; arrival of A. J. Smith at, 435
Nashville and Chattanooga railroad, junction with the Memphis and Charleston railroad, I, 433; Forrest cuts the, II, 428
Natchez, Mississippi, is ordered to, I, 485; boundary of Sherman's command at, II, 54
Natchitoches, La., in camp near, I, 31, 35
Navy Department, consuls in expedition against Fort Fisher, II, 26
Negley, J. S., question of his restoration to duty, II, 48 Negroes, friendly, I, 344; employment of, by Union armies, 353-355, 422; Join Sheridan's column, II, 294; their work in the South during the war, 353, 353; in the grand review at Washington, 389; the Santo Domingo question and the, 353; employment of astros, see Collored Troops. See also SLAVERY.
Negro question, the, in the United States, II, 292, 294
Negro suffrage, the question of, II, 399, 391
Neil, Thomas H., II, 99
Nelson, William, reinforces Grant at Fort Donelson, I, 243; ordered to Nashville, 293; sent to Nashville, 283; arrives at Savannah, 276; at Shiloh, 286-288, 361
Nevilse River, crossed by Union troops, II, 411, 422
New Albany, Miss., Blair leaves for, I, 223
New Berne, N. C., Union possession of, and forces at, II, 33, 274, 275, 277, 308, 439, 441, 442; importance of, 64; Schofield sent to, 275, 276, 441; colonel arrives at Savannah, 275, 439, 444; communication with Raleigh, 290, 291; communications with Goldsboro, 280, 281, 286; expedition toward Goldsboro from, 441; disaster to expedi- tion, 441
New Bethel Church, Va., Burnside sent to, II, 148
New Braunfels, Tex., I, 48
New Carthage, La., the "Henry Clay" at, I, 386; Metternand at, 388, 389; Grant's visit to, 389; order of march from Milliken's Bend to, 390
New Castle, Va., W. F. Smith blunderingly ordered to, II, 163
New Cold Harbor, II, 157, 166
"New Era," the, Ellet's escape on, I, 387
New Hope River, II, 153
New Hope Church, Ga., II, 86, 423
New Inlet, N. C., II, 435, 436
New Market, Va., Sigel's defeat at, II, 72, 143, 144, 411; Sheridan's operations at and near, 236, 445
New Market road, Va., operations on, II, 415, 421
New Mexico, boundary of Texas, I, 32; negotiations for cession of, 115; purchase of, 134
New Orleans, La., the Fourth Infantry or- dered to, I, 37; an early-morning duel in, 37; departure of Fourth Infantry from, 39; Gen. Lovell at, 142; fall of, 317; Banks at, 440; II, 58, 61, 400; proposal to make a base at, I, 481; leave of absence asked for visit to, 485; visit to Banks at, 486; serious accident at, 487; proposed expedition from, against Mobile, II, 210, 400; concentration of stores about, 254; Canny commanding at, 277; Granger in, 279; Banks to return troops to, 400; guarding the Mississippi from Port Hudson to, 390
New Orleans and Jackson railroad, broken by Confederate forces, I, 435
New River, W. Va., Avery's operations at, II, 411; Stonewall's raid on, 458
New River Bridge, W. Va., breaking of the, II, 75, 386, 403
Newspapers, fighting battles in the, I, 72. See also Press.
Newton, John, battles before Atlanta, II, 276
Newtown, Va., rallying of Sheridan's troops between Midlothian and, II, 420
New York, early visit to, I, 16, 19; embarkation of the, from New York, 153, 154; Confederate attempts to capture, II, 95, 410
Nineteenth Army-corps, arrives at Hamp- tont's Landing, I, 148, 149, 393
Nineteenth Illinois Infantry, difficultly with its colonel, I, 194; relieves the 21st regiment at Paducah, 199
Ninth Arty-exers returned to Burnside's, I, 475, 485; supports the Army of the Potomac, II, 56; mobility of, 57; organization, 100; moves from Spottsylvania, 147; or- dered to Jericho Bridge, 148; Grant's headquarters with, 148; position, May 26, 1864, 153; ordered toward Hanover Town, 152; incorporated with the main army, 182, 468; in investment of Petersburg, 413, 415; at crossing of the Rappahannock and the Alexandria railroad, 401; reaches the North Anna, 406; instructions for, March 24, 1865, 471, 474; attacked, 448, 490; moves from, to the South Side road, 453. See also BURNSIDE.
Norfolk, Va., in Union hands, II, 53, 398; summer to be reinforced from, 147
North, the, sympathy with accession in, I, 181; disavantage in the personnel of its army, 230; exultation over the fall of Fort Donelson, 269; effect of Gettyburg and Vicksburg at, 475, 476; contrasted with the South as regards license of speech and press, II, 31, 53; the copperhead press of, 353; weary of the war, 228, 300, 391; resis- tance of its army, 201; its resources and strength contrasted with those of the South, 228, 353-355, 397; anxiety about Sherman in, 245, 336; exaggeration of re- ports of battles in, II, 237; excitement in, over Sherman's terms to Johnston, 355; how slavery regarded in, 386, 397
North Anna, the, Sheridan's movements on, II, 78, 195, 265, 414; march to Cold Har- bor from, 80; Hancock's operations on, 149, 190, 406; Burnside moves to, 150, 155, 400; Lee's position and strength on, 150, 131, 469, 408; impossibility of turning the enemy between the South Anna and, 153; withdrawing to the northside, 154, 155, 408; movements on, May 27, 1864, 156. Lee deceived by the movements on, 157; battle of the, 183, 410; the Fifth and Sixth Corps at, 406
North Atlantic Blockading Squadron, the, II, 420
North Carolina, secession of, I, 183; Union holdings in, II, 53, 54, 398; Hoke free to leave, 144; Hoke's reinforcements for Lee from, 151; the governor's call for defectors of Fort Fisher, 264; Sherman proposes to march through, 272, 441; importance to the enemy, 273; J. E. Johnston put in command of all troops in, 280, 284; changing the railroad gauge in, 381; Johnston's attack in, 385; fears of Lee getting into, 295; conquest of the Confederacy from the Mississippi to, 319; apprehended approach of Johnston to Appomattox from, 340; Johnston confronting Sherman in, 362; Grant goes to, to adjust Sherman's difficulties, 365; withdrawal of troops from, 373; Sherman's march through, 376; exhaustion of the country, 376; constituted a separate military department, 493; Schofield to aid Sherman in, 439, 446; proposal that Thomas campaign in, 446; proposal that Sherman invade, 450; North Carolina railroad, Stoneman's raid on, II, 458; North Chickamauga, the course and junction with the Tennessee, I, 539; flotilla on, 539, 540; operations on, 4; Jefferson C. Davis at, 41; Nottoaway River, Wilson crosses the, II, 415; Nottoaway Station, Va., Wilson destroys the railroad at, II, 414; Northwest, the feeling in, in 1860, I, 173, 177; Nueces River, disputed boundary of Texas, I, 33, 34; at Corpus Christi, 41; Indian massacres on the, 48; wild horses on the, 61; Ny River, movements on the, II, 119, 126; its course and character, 126, 127; Oath-bound societies, I, 169; Obstructionist, the fate of an, I, 45; O'Fallon, John, I, 26; Officers, the value of effective, II, 40, 41; Oglesby, Richard, commanding at Cairo, I, 231; to command at Bird's Point, 214; to move on the St. Francis River, 219; ordered to New Madrid, 219; predicament of, 229; wounded at Corinth, 348, 349; Ohio, Nonh Grant settles in, I, 2, 3; the Simpson family in, 6; birth of U. S. Grant in, 7; Grant's school life in, 8; Morgan's raid through, 17; visiting relations in, 153; "Ohio," the, a crowded passage on, I, 154; Ohio River, the, early steamboats on, I, 18; threatened by the rebels, 261; II, 257, 258; National troops on, I, 265; A. S. Johnston's plan to cross, 298; fears of being driven back to, 336; Bragg's march toward, 366; Sooy Smith's troops ice-bound in the, II, 41; Forrest's raid on, 63; Hunter's retreat, 193; gunboats on the Tennessee near, 239; Okalona, Miss., Hatch destroys the railroad at, I, 408; Old Cold Harbor, Va., operations at, II, 157, 162, 164, 166; Old Court House, Va., orders for night march toward, II, 179; Sherman proposes to march through, 272, 441; importance to the enemy, 273; J. E. Johnston put in command of all troops in, 280, 284; changing the railroad gauge in, 381; Johnston's attack in, 385; fears of Lee getting into, 295; conquest of the Confederacy from the Mississippi to, 319; apprehended approach of Johnston to Appomattox from, 340; Johnston confronting Sherman in, 362; Grant goes to, to adjust Sherman's difficulties, 365; withdrawal of troops from, 373; Sherman's march through, 376; exhaustion of the country, 376; constituted a separate military department, 493; Schofield to aid Sherman in, 439, 446; proposal that Thomas campaign in, 446; proposal that Sherman invade, 450; Opequon Creek, Va., battle of, II, 216, 419, 420; political effect of the victory at, 217; Orange and Fredericksburg plank road, Burnside promised to, the, 230; Orange Court House, Va., road to the Wilderness from, 106, II, 100, 102; Orange plank road, Va., movements on the, II, 100, 105, 110; Orange supside, Va., the, movements on the, 100, 107; Orchard Knob, Tenn., viewing the battle of Lookout Mountain from, II, 9, 10; Grant and Thomas on, 12, 17; Ord, E. O. C., commanding center of the Army of the Mississippi, I, 338; commanding reinforcements for Corinth, 338; plan of his operations, 338, 340, 341; engagement near Burnsville, 341; attacks Iuka, 341-343; attacks Van Dorn at Hatchie Bridge, 347; wounded, 347; assumes command at Corinth, 347; at meeting between Pemberton and Grant, 467; to reinforce Sherman, 473, 482; to reinforce Banks, 486; to move against the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, II, 58, 61, 403; threatened and ordered to move to Jonesboro, 439; in operations near Nashville, I, 298-302; commanding the Eighteenth Corps, 301; movement against Richmond, 218, 219; wounded, 219; in battle of White Oak Station, 330; in operations of April 2, 1865, 308-311; troops at Port Gregg, 311; marches toward Burkeville, 324, 453; Grant marches with his command, 324; ordered to seize roads between Burkeville and High Bridge, 330; becomes alarmed for Washburn, 339; movement via Prince Edward's Court House, 332; southerly movement of, 333; relieved at own request, 403; captures Fort Harrison, 421; superseded Butler, 439; commanding Department of Virginia and North Carolina, 439; covers the crossing of the Chickahominy, 446; instructions to, Mar. 24, 1865, 447, 448; question of supplies for, 448; movement, Mar. 27, 449, 450; proposed assault at Five Forks, 451; in conference at Hatcher's Run, 453; in battle of Sailor's Creek, 454; at Farmville, 454; reaches Appomattox Station, 456; Oregon, Lieut. Slaughter killed in, I, 158; the Fourth Infantry ordered to, 161; Washington Territory set off from, 161; Gen. Canby killed in, II, 372; Orizaba, Mex., road to the City of Mexico through, I, 198; extension of, 198; Osgood, Edward, commanding Co. F, 444; Osborn, Edward D., colonel 3d U. S. Colored Cavalry, II, 431; operations on Big Black River, 431; Osterhaus, F. J., at battle of Port Gibson, I, 403; advance to Bolton, 420; at Champion's Hill, 428, 429, 430-435; at Edward's Station, 435; in battle of Black River Bridge, 439; in siege of Vicksburg, 457; report to Hooker, II, 4; at Brown's Ferry, 4, 8; in operations west of Chattanooga, 7; at Lookout Creek, 8; in battle of Lookout Mountain, 8, 9; serving under Hooker at Chattanooga, 28; commanding Logan's Fifteenth Corps, 224; Owen, J. T., his command, II, 97; in battle of the Wilderness, 108; Ovail Creek, Tenn., Lew Wallace's march toward, I, 278; condition of, at time of Shiloh, 290; bridged, 308
INDEX

Oxen, use of in Mexican war, I, 68
Oxford, Miss. operations at and near, I, 356, 360, 364
Ox Ford, Va., movements at, I, 159, 161, 153
Ozumba, Mex., ascent of Popocatepetl from, I, 142; a night at, 144

Pachucu, Mex., occupation of, I, 133; an unappreciated honor at, I, 140
Pacific Coast, cost of living on, in 1849-1853, I, 101; Grant's fondness for the, 167; the opening up of the, II, 335-335
Paducah, Ky., seizure of, I, 214, 215; addressed to citizens of, 215; Tillman eva-uates, 216; bringing troops to Fort Henry from, 237; telegraphic communication with Cairo, 258; Forrest's raid to, II, 63, 425; Buford's unsuccessful attempt to capture, 425

Page, John, mortally wounded at Palo Alto, I, 169
Painesville, Va., Davie's captures at, II, 324
Palo Alto, Mex., battle of, I, 67-70, 72; Taylor's army at, 139
Palmer, Gen. commanding 14th Illinois, I, 169; in expedition to Brown's Ferry, 504; plan of operations at Chattanooga, 521; in action at Fort Wood, II, 3; at and near Graysville, 19, 25, 26; question of responsibility for failure of attack on railroad at Atlanta, 92; disputed seniority between Schofield and, 92; instructed by Sherman as to supplies, 139, 440

Palmetto, pursuit of Hood by, II, 434
Palmetto, Ga., Pres. Davis's speech at, II, 181, 220-230; Hood moves from, 430 Palmyra, Mo., Grant ordered to, I, 128; services of, 417

Pamunkey River, movements, etc., on, the, I, 63, 75, 154, 156-159, 408, 445
Panama, outbreak of cholera at, I, 155, 157
Panama, Jethmus of, the rainy season on the, I, 154
Panama Railroad, extent in 1862, I, 154
Paris, Tenn., proposed expedition against, I, 258
Parke, J. G., brings reinforcements to Haines's Bluff, I, 456; feinting movements by, II, 219; commanding the Ninth Corps, 257, 288; defeats Gordon's attack at Petersburg, 297, 298; to hold lines about Petersburg, 299; carries the enemy's main line at Petersburg, 308, 309, 458; desperate fighting by, 310; attacked by Lee, 311; his the captured works for defense, 311; moves out on the Danville road, 310; ordered to the South Side railroad, 322, 325; in command around Petersburg and City Point, 447; position at, Mar. 29, 1865, 458; at Hatcher's Run, 451

Parker, Ely S., secretary of Grant's staff, at Lee's surrender, II, 343
Parker's Store, Va., movements at, II, 104, 105 Passacaglia, R., the Fourth Infantry ordered to, I, 102; suggested to Banks's base in operations against Mobile, II, 101 Patterson, Robert, commands division in Scott's Army, I, 397; advance toward Japana, 420

Patrick, M. R., II, 110
Payne, — horse trade with, I, 10
Peace, the art of maintaining, II, 331
Peace Commissioners, mission of the, II, 297-298; meeting with Lincoln at Hampton Roads, 353

Peach Hill, La., defeat of Banks at, II, 426
Pearl River, I, 422
Pecan River, Sherman crosses the, II, 284
佩雷格尔, the, I, 109-111
Peeble's Farm, Va., Warren captures camp at, II, 213
Pegram, John, II, 100
Penberton, John, messenger from Gen. Worth to Lieut. Grant, I, 124; commanding at Holly Springs, 349; fortified at the Tallahatchie, 352; estimated strength at opening of and through Vicksburg campaign, 352, 411, 417, 427, 475; driven from the Tallahatchie, 356, 362; plan of operations against, 359; commanding garrison of Vicksburg, 359; falls back, 361; returns to Vicksburg, 361; threatening at Haines's Bluff, 398; his defenses against a siege from the south side, 412, 414; preparing for an attack by, 420, 424; orders from, and correspondence with, 420, 423, 458, 462-463; Johnston announces loss of Jackson to, 425, 426; ordered to join Johnston at Clinton, 427; southward movement from Edward's Station, 427; at Champion's Hill, 429, 431, 435, 457; falls back to the Big Black, 455; fails to join forces with Johnston, 457; expected assistance from Johnston for, 458; communication with Johnston cut off, 456; plan of escape across the Mississippi, 463, 464; asks counsel of his division commanders, as to evacuation, 464, 465; meeting with Grant before Vicksburg, 466, 476; composition of his army, 469; proposes amendment to terms of capitulation, 570; accepts terms, 471; supposed reason for negotiating with Grant, 570-571; appeal for assistance to compel his troops to sign paroles, 576; demoralization of his army, 486

Pendleton, W. N., his command, II, 169; appointed to oversee the paroling of Lee's army, 1347 Pennsylvania, the Grants in, II, 2; the Simpson family in, 3, 6; the Army of Northern Virginia driven from, 478; raids of the enemy into, II, 295, 417; free from Confederate invasion, 295, 299; Sigel protecting, 493; moves through, 493, 494; advance to 495-496

Pennybacker, G., in assault on Fort Fisher, I, 369; wounded, 250
Penon, Ed., I, 188, 190
Penasco, Fla., Federal possession of, I, 54, 399; Steele moves against Mobile from, 458
Peons, Mexican, I, 148
Perkins's plantation, route from Smith's plantation to, I, 389; headquarters at, 393; depot of supplies at, 460
Perote, Mex., road to the city of Mexico through, I, 98, 127, 128; surrender of the castle of, 163
Petersburg, Va., Butler's movements against, II, 59, 73, 173, 186, 412; defenseless condition of, 73; operations against railroad companies of Gen. Edward's Station, 427; at operations against, 133, 466, 410; plans of operations against, 133-135, 256, 500; possibility of capturing, June, 1864, 186, 187, 193-194; from Confederate garrison in, and defenses of, 186, 187, 198, 268, 413; Hancock's movements against, 186, 421; W.

INDEX

F. Smith's movements against, 186, 187, 412, 413; assaults on, 186-189, 208, 413, 433; hospitalities at, 191; investment of, 188-191; Confederate losses at, June, 1864, 189; resting the troops at, 190; strengthening the Union position at, 193; Union and Confederate lines at, 188; the northern army at, 189; Lee's anxiety to capture, 193, 194, 410; consternation in, 263; Meade commanding operations at, 269; firing a salutcat, in honor of Sheridan, 217; the enemy reinfurces, 219, 413, 451; close of active operations around, for the winter, 277; arrival of the Peace Commissioners at, 276; anxiety of the last few weeks before, 291; Lee determines to assault the Union lines at, 296; Davis and Lee agree to abandon, 296; Parke to hold lines about, 299, 447; movement before, Mar. 21, 1865, 299; Sherman to cooperate in movements on, 301, 449; capture of the outer works, 310; Humphreys ordered toward, 312; evacuated, 313, entry into, 314; evacuated by the Union army, 318; Pres. Lincoln's visit to, 318-320; road to Lynchburg from, 328; effect of the fall of, on the Union troops, 350; Gillmore sent against, 410; the Army of the Potomac to move according with the evacuation before, 412; Early reinforced from, 429, 442; Gregg's movements at, 421; improving facilities of supplies before, 421; operations before, during winter of, 1864-65, 422; the enemy withdraws troops from, to protect Richmond, 421; armies of the Potomac and of the James confronting, 446; fears that Lee would abandon, 446; purpose of turning the enemy at, 447; its capture imminent, 450; Gibbon's assault on the south side of, 453

Phelps, S. L., destroys bridge of the Memphis and Ohio railroad, over the Tennessee, I, 424

Philadelphia, Pa., early visit to, I, 16, 19; Confederate attempts to capture, II, 35; Grant informed of the President's assas- sination at, 358; transportation facilities in, in 1865, 358

Phister, E. C., at school of Richeson and Rand, I, 8

Phrases:
"Hard tack! hard tack!" I, 443
"If a man can't skin, he must hold a leg while somebody else does," II, 58, 68
"I purpose to light it out on this line if it takes all summer," II, 132
"If they cannot get out where they want to, they can crawl back by the hole they went in at," II, 246

Pickett, George E., his command, II, 101; attempts to reinforce Lee, 146; encounters Hancock at Milford, 146, 147; reinforces Lee, 151; sent to Five Forks, 394

Piedmont, Va., Hunter's success at, II, 135, 412

Pierce, B. R., carries bridge over the North Anna, II, 143

Pierce, Franklin, a possible rival of, for the Presidency, I, 75; injured before Con- treras, 113, *114; candidacy for the Presidency, 114, 135; his personal character, 114

Pillow, opposed by Gen. Taylor in the Mexican war, I, 60; Grant's views as to, and punishment of, 304

Pillow, Gideon J., at Cerro Gordo, I, 101; commands division in Scott's army, 103; advances from Puebla, 102; capture of Chapultepeque assigned to, 120; hostility to Gen. Scott, 124, 135; placed under arrest, 134; released from arrest, 335; personal character, 241, 254, 257; telegram sent to Johnston, May 10, 134;ifies from Fort Donel- son, 234, 257, 258; report of killed and wounded at Donelson, 258

Piet Kno, Mo., Price drives the garrison from, II, 427

Pine Mountain, Ga., Joseph E. Johnston at, II, 433

Piney Branch Church, Va., II, 101, 119, 129; Grant's headquarters at, 125

Pioneers, employment of, at Vicksburg, I, 452

Pittsburg, Pa., I, 18

"Pittsburg," the gunboat, at Fort Donel- son, I, 247; running the batteries at Vicksburg, 356

Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., position of troops at, I, 52; advance on, 273; question of intrenching before, 274; early removal of headquarters to, 275; Grant's attendance at, 271; skirmishes at, 275, 276; battle of, 277 et seq. (see also MILOI); Webster's artillery at, 284, 285; bridge connecting Crump's Landing and, 285; arrival of Halleck at, 305, 307

Plains, crossing the, I, 160

Plan df July 1875, Rio, Tex., Twiggs and Patterson camp at, I, 99

Pleasant Hill, La., battles at, II, 426

Pleasanton, Alfred, superseded by Sheridan, II, 69

Pleasants, Henry, suggests the mine at Petersburgh, II, 498

Plymouth, N. C., in Union hands, II, 53, 388; capture of the Federal garrison at, 64, 407

Po River, Va., movements at, II, 122, 123, 126-129, 132, 147; course and character, 126-128

Pocotaligo, S. C., Sherman at, II, 276, 277

Point Coupee, La., Bank's army reaches, II, 426

Point Isabel, Taylor's expedition to, I, 64- 67; Supply arrives at, 66

Point Pleasant, O., Jesse R. Grant settles at, I, 4; birth of U. S. Grant at, 7

Political influence, effect on personal responsibility, I, 383

Politics, effect of, on the Administration's conduct of the war, II, 217

Polk, James K., President of the United States, attitude in Mexican war, I, 45, 90, 92, 135

Polk, Leonidas, at the battle of Belmont, I, 228; occupies Meridan, II, *39, 40; retreats toward Demopolis, 41

"Poor whites," in the South, I, 178, 507

Pope, John, U. S. mustering officer at Springfield, Ill., I, 191; acquaintance with, at West Point and in Mexico, 101; an unexpected offer from, 191; commanding in Missouri, 291, 392; captures Island No. 10, 307; at Hamburg Landing, 307; commanding left wing of Halleck's army at Pittsburg Landing, 307; "gets loose" on the march to Corinth, 312; sent in purs- suit from Corinth, 316; defeated by the Army of Northern Virginia, 336; to campaign west of the Mississippi, II, 446
INDEX

499

Poplar Spring Church, Va., capture of the enemy's works at, II, 421

Popocatepetl, Mex., visit to, I, 142-145

Portage County, O., Jesse R. Grant settles in, I, 1

Porter, Andrew, excursion with, in Mexico, I, 142

Porter, D. D., to cooperate with Sherman against Vicksburg, I, 337; complaints from the Yazoo, 362; distrusts McLe land's ability, 367; explorations on the bayous, 377-379; cooperation of, 384; preparations for running the batteries at Vicksburg, 385; sends the "Indianola" down the river, 387; cooperation in attack on Grand Gulf, 396-398, 406, 410; runs the batteries at Grand Gulf, 397, 398; goes to Banks's assistance, 415; supplies navy guns for the siege of Vicksburg, 450; expedition to Haines's Bluff, 456; notified of Pemberton's plan of escape by the river, 463; notified of cessation of hostilities, 465; service at Vicksburg, 486, 481; at Cairo, 498; asked to assist Sherman, 496; operations against Fort Fisher, II, 249, 262, 265-270, 281-283; complaints bitterly of Butler's abandonment, 367; escorts Lincoln to Richmond, 355; present at interview between Lincoln and Weitzel, 353; in Red River expedition, 429; conferences with Grant and Butler at Hampton Roads, 453; commanding North Atlantic blockading squadron, 457; personal and military qualities, 457; conferences with Grant and Terry, at Fort Fisher, 446; cooperates in capture of Wilmington, 441

Porter, Horace, mission to Sherman, II, 231, 429

Porter, Mary, I, 1

Porter, Theodore, killed by Mexicans, I, 64

Porter, W. D., commanding the "Essex" at Fort Henry, I, 236

Port Gibson, Miss., movements toward, battle at, and capture of, I, 398, 461-465, 447; II, 172

Port Hudson, La., situation, importance, etc., I, 351, 374, 419, 464; Farragut takes the batteries at, 387; operations against, 410, 440, 455, 481; surrender of, 475, 478; great Union capture of cattle near, 485, 486-487; fighting and guarding the Mississippi between New Orleans and, 490

Portland, Oreg., Indians near, I, 162

Port Royal, S. C., Federal possession of, I, 103, 308

Port Royal, Va., changing base from Fredericksburg to, II, 142; change of base to White House from, 154

Portsmouth, Va., Summer to be reinforced from, II, 447

Potatoes, an experiment in raising, I, 162

Potomac River, as a source of supplies, I, 62; movements on, 264, 416, 418; in Union possession, 258

Potter, Robert B., his command, II, 100; in assault at Spottsylvania, *136; junction with Hancock, 159; captures Redan at Pe tersburg, Va., 159; in the Petersburg mine affair, 262

Pound Gap, Ky., Morgan's movements at, II, 425

Powder-boat, See Fort Fisher.

Powhatan, Va., Kautz's raid at, II, 407

Prentiss, B. M., relieves Grant at Ironton, I, *208; march from Ironton to Jackson, 211, 212; question of seniority with, 222; character, 213; at Shiloh, 274, 279-281, 406; capture of his division, 280, 281, 302; ordered to send reinforcements to Vicksburg, 448; defeats Holmes at Helena, 473

President of the United States, an exalted position, I, 93; effects of hostility to candidates for, I, 353

President of the United States, his responsibility in selecting commanders, I, 383

Press, the, the wonderful influence of, I, 72; in the South, 379, 380, 381; in the North, 55; services of, inspired by the Southern, 245; the copperhead, 333; reveals secrets of Fort Fisher expedition, 435

Price, Sterling, raids in Missouri, I, 208, 489, II, 427, 428; movements against, I, 215, II, 427, 428, 436; reinforcements for, I, 219; troops available to reinforce Van Dorn, 337; at Holly Springs, 399; advances upon Corinth, 396; impossibility of attacking, 397; enters Inkas, 397; advancing to reinforce Van Dorn, 398; dangerous situation of, 399; joins Van Dorn in attack on Corinth, 401; movements of, II, 332; at Jacksonport, 437; attacks Pilot Knob, 457; moves toward Kansas, 427; defeated at the Big Blue, 428

Price, "the, running the batteries at Vicksburg, I, 386

Prime, F. E., engineer work at Vicksburg, I, *450

Prince Edward's Court House, Va., movements of, II, 383, 454

Prisoners, matter of paroling, exchanging, etc., at Vicksburg, I, 469, 476, 477

Profanity, justified, I, 78

Professors, Sherman prepares for a, I, 30, 31; the idea destroyed, 35

Property, protection of, I, 391

Provost-Guard, Army of the Potomac, II, 100

Prussia, conquest of France by, II, 390

Public office, the most efficient servants in, II, 47

Puebla, Mex., Worth's advance to and occupation of, I, 106, 104; route to the City of Mexico from, 106, 127, 138; Gen. Pierce joins the army at, 113; occupation of, 134; an unappreciated honor at, 140

Pullaski, Tenn., movements at, II, 254, 432; Forrest's skirmish at, 428

Purdy, Tenn., Lew Wallace's march toward, I, 258

Purdy Road, the, I, 289

Quaker guns, at Corinth, I, 315

Quaker road, Va., movements and fighting on, II, 199, 450, 451

Quarles's Mills, Va., headquarters at, II, 154

Queen of the West, the, attacks the "Indianola," I, 388; sunk in the Red River, 388

Queretaro, Mex., temporary government at, I, 134

Quinby, I. F., reconnoiters Fort Pemberton, I, *576; reinforces McLe land at Vicksburg, 445

Quincy, Ill., Grant ordered to, I, 198

Quitman, John A., commands brigade at Monterey, I, 84; commands division in Scott's army, 101; advances from Puebla, 105; in action against garrison Belen, *126, 121; appointed to take possession of the City of Mexico, 125
INDEX

Raccoon Mountain, Ga., topography, Confederate positions, etc., in, I, 455, 502, 503, 506, 507.
Railroad, Grant's first sight of, I, 19.
Railroad men, acuteness of, I, 315.
Railroads, effect of the introduction of, II, 387, 388.
Raleigh, N. C., communications with New Bern, Wilmington, and Goldsboro, II, 296, 281; Sherman's movements toward and at, 441, 443, 457; meeting with Sherman at, 305, 457, 458.
Railroad, —, horse-trade with, I, 11, 12.
Rand, —, schoolmaster, I, 8.
Ransom, T. C., at Champion's Hill, I, 492, 417; bridges the Big Black, 411; military ability, 280; ordered to Natchez, 483; commanding Blair's Seventeenth Corps, 334.
Rapidan River, Union holdings on the, II, 53, 398; the country between the James and the, 55, 56, 102; positions, movements, etc., on, 55, 57, 62, 72, 90-98, 239; crossing the, 62, 103-105, 107, 114, 116, 401, 404; the campaign to the James River from, 66, 411; narrow escape of closing the campaign on McPherson, crossing the, 132.
Rapid transit, ideas in 1839, I, 19; effect of, on the individual States, II, 397, 388.
Rappahannock River, movements on the, II, 55, 142, 491.
Ravena, Q., Jesse R., Grant in business at, I, 4.
Rawlins, John A., speaks at meeting at Galena, I, 184; appointed assistant adjutant-general to commanding the Vicksburg campaign, 454.
Raymond, Miss., McPherson at, I, 413, 414; battle of, 415, 447; Sherman and Meclermand ordered to, 419, 420; Osterhaus at, 426; roads from, 431; feeding the destitute at, 483; success of the Army of the Tennessee at, I, 172.
Read, Theodore, sent to recall Washburn, II, 439; attacks Lee near Farmville, 399, 391, 451; killed, 333, 454.
Reading, Grant's frontness for, I, 20, 31, 35.
Real-estate business, Grant in the, I, 190.
Reams' Station, Va., Hancock and Gregg defeated at, II, 212, 421; destruction of the Weldon railroad at, 414, 421; Wilson defeated at, 415.
Rebellion, the Mexican war the forerunner of the, I, 130, 170; "patriotic" writers on the, 132; political effects of, on participants in, 136; the right to suppress, II, 356, 357; necessity of breaking the military power of the, 357, 400.
Rebel property, policy of destruction of, I, 304, 305.
Reconstruction, a blow to, II, 338, 339; the period of, 370.
Recreation, boyish, I, 9.
Red River, the, the Fourth Infantry ordered up, I, 28; in camp between the Sabine and, 31, 35, 36; possible route to Vicksburg via, 373; waterway for the enemy, 374; the enemy's holdings below, 374; Ellet's action on, 378; the ram "Webb" in, 388; Hancock's movements on, 410, 410, II, 58, 61, 64, 65, 72, 400, 426, 427; getting the gunboats over the rapids, 426.
Redwood, trade in, at Humboldt, I, 105.

Refugees, employing, at Jefferson City, I, 216. See also KANSAS.
Regiment bands, maintenance of, I, 141.
Regimental funds, I, 141.
Reorganization of the armies, plans for, II, 45 et seq.
Republic of Texas, Party rise of the, I, 169; how viewed in the South, 170, 171; in Galena, 173; disasters in the elections of 1862, 369; effect of Sherman's and Sheridan's successes on the campaign of 1864, 94.
Resaca, Ga., battle of, II, 88, 423; Wheeler cuts railroad between Dalton and, 92.
Resaca de la Palma, topography of, I, 67; battle of, 70-72; Taylor's array at, 130.
Revolutions, the flight of, I, 175.
Reynolds, Thomas C., lieutenant-governor of Missouri, joins the rebels, I, 180.
Rice, James C., his command, I, 98; killed at Spotsylvania, 150.
Richardson, Anna, I, 2.
Richeson and Rand, school of, I, 8.
Richmond, La., projected waterway via, I, 380; MeClernand sent to New Carthage via, 388.
Richmond, Va., report of great Confederate victory at Fort Donelson sent to, I, 249, 254; assault on, 1854, over fall of Fort Donelson, 269; Johnston's despatch to, concerning Fort Donelson, 267; one line of communication between the West and, 317; battles near, II, 54; defenses of, and positions on the Confederate line around, 55, 66, 174, 399; Butler's operations against, 58, 62, 73, 75, 402-404; Gillmore and Smith to operate against, 58, 92; possibilities and fears of Lee's falling back to, 63, 66, 113, 121, 152, 168, 492; dependence on Lee, 66; exchange of newspapers with, 68, 181; leakage of news from the Union armies to, 68, 69; the object of the Grand Campaign, 71, 73, 401; operations against railroads and telegraphs communicating with, 73, 77, 133, 140, 141, 154, 177, 406, 409, 414, 415, 449; Grant plans to fight Lee between the Rapidan and, 73, 174, 402; Sheridan's operations against, 77-79, 133, 141, 294, 405, 406, 415; the grand movement of the Army of the Potomac against, 95 et seq.; hopes of getting between Lee and, 121, 122, 127, 147, 152 et seq., 405; Beauregard's defensive operations, 133, 144, 188; Hancock's operations against, 145, 147; movement by the left flank from, 142, 145 et seq.; Lee reinforced from, 146, 151; Warren's movements against, 147; "Live Yankees" in, 151, 182; Lee telegraphs belated news to, 157; roads from Hanover to, 157; proposed siege of, 174, 409; importance to the Confederacy, 176, 291, 319, 320; consternation in, and desperate condition of, 181, 190, 289, 291, 355; Confederate gunboats at, 182, 185; importance of the Shenandoah Valley to, 206; movements to prevent Early's reinforcement from, 206; threatening, from the north side of the James, 200, 218, 219, 303, 320; the President fears the reinforcement of Early from, 218; Confederate troops from the Valley sent to, 221; close of active operations around, for the winter, 222; plan of campaign against, for spring of 1865, 226, 446-448; length of lines before, 231; reinforcements for Fort Fisher from, 265, 266; proposed movemcnt by Sherman against, 372, 301, 441, 449; Lee to be watched closely at, 275; frantic efforts in, to retard Sherman's advance, 280; Davis and Lee agree to abandon, 296; plan for capturing, 300; Weitzel notified to be ready to enter, 308; the Confederate government abandons, 316; deceptions practiced upon the people of, 320; Weitzel succeeded and found to be on fire, 323, 321; Lincoln's visit to, 335, 356, 363; proposed meeting of the Virginia legislature after the fall of, 356, 358, 363; Halleck sent to, 374; Halleck invites Sherman to, 374, 379; Gov. Smith's sketch from, 377; junction of the Armies of the Potomac and of the James before, 402, 446; possibility of capturing, in 1864, 444; Kautz's expedition against, 446; proposed south of, 449; town of troops from Washington to, 417; Early's retreat toward, 417; weakness of the enemy's lines before, 421, 453; operations before, during winter 1864-65, 422; Canby ordered to send troops before, 427; fears that Lee would abandon, 446; possible plans of the enemy for the defense of, 449; its capture imminent, 496; cavalry sent to Petersburg from, 451

Richmond and Danville railroad, Va., II, 328

Richmond and Fredericksburg road, Lee's position on the, 123

Richmond, artillery at a Petersburg railroad, why Butler could not cross the, 75

Ricketts, J. B., his command, II, 99; at battle of the Monocacy, 196, 416; sent to Baltimore, 416

Rienzi, Miss., troops at, I, 327, 335, 340

Riley, Bennett, at Contreras, I, 111

Ringgold, Samuel, killed at Palo Alto, I, 69

Robert, Smith's sketch of engagements, etc., at, II, 35, 36, 83

Rio Frio Mountain, the, I, 168, 128

Rio Grande, the boundary of Texas, I, 32, 33, 334; purport of, 45, 51; wild horses on, 61; arrival of the U.S. army at, 63; outbreak of the war on, 66; course and characteristics, 67; movement of troops on, 76; scott advises falling back to, 92; in camp on, 94; to Vera Cruz from, 95, 96; advantage of placing a garrison on, 484; in Union hands, II, 55, 338; orders to Banks to hold the, 38, 61, 449; proposed use of colored troops on, 490; Sherman sent to, 389, 459

Ripley, O., school life in, I, 8, 14; Grant starts for West Point from, 18

Ripley, Miss., Rosecran's pursuit to, I, 348

Rivanna River, Sheridan destroys bridges over, II, 445

Roanoke River, the proposed movements on, II, 301, 449; Wilson destroys the Danville railroad at, 415; Summer to destroy supplies south of, 448

Robertson, J. M., II, 106

Robinson, John C., II, 38

Rockwell, Md. Early at, II, 416

Rockwell, William, I, 2

Rockwell, the widow, I, 2

Rocky Springs, Miss., McPherson and McClellan at, I, 307; Wheeler at, I, 43

Rodes, R. E., II, 101

Rodney, Miss., contemplated landing at, I, 377

Rolling Fork, water communications of, I, 377

Rome, Ga., Bragg at, I, 329; Sherman sends troops to, II, 232; captured by Jefferson C. Davis, 423

Rosecran, W. S., commanding left wing, Army of the Mississippi, I, 335; troops of, ordered into Corinth, 337; commanding District of Corinth, 338; plan of operations for, 340; delay at Jacinto, 341; defeated on the Jacinto road, 342; enters Iuka, 342; Grant's opinion of, 343; his insubordination, disfavored, I, 425, 424, 492, 493; faint-hearted pursuit by, 343; Van Dorn's attempt to capture, 346; failure to pursue after victory at Corinth, 347, 348; ordered back, 348; losses at Corinth, 348; relieved from duty with Army of the Mississippi, 349; succeeds Buell in command, 349; denounces Murphy for surrendering Iuka, 361; confronted by Bragg in Tennessee, 448; driven into Chattanaooga, 489, 541, 494; Grant ordered to cooperate with, 497, 498; C. A. Dana sent to, 488; Halleck suggests that Grant relieve, 491; superseded by Thomas, 493; ordered to move against Bragg, 492; confronted by Bragg at Murfreesboro, 493; Davis fears his retreat from Chattanooga, 492, 493; assistance needed for, 493; his mistake in operations against Bragg, 453, 494; defeated at Chickamauga, 464; abandoning Lookout Mountain, 494; difficulty of bringing troops to, 325; advised of his supersession, 497; meeting with, at Stevenson, 498; contemplated retrograde movement of, 499; reinforcements for, 503; operations in Missouri, II, 425, 427, 428; ordered to send A. J. Smith to Thomas, 433

Ross, G. W., reports probability of capturing Fort Fisher, II, 437

Ross, L. F., commanding at Bolivar, I, 332; reinforcements for, 322; enters the Yaxoo Pass, 375, 376; retreat of, 376; anxiety for, 377

Rosser, Thomas L., his command, II, 102; in battle of the Wilderness, 102; defeated by Sheridan at Fisher's Hill, 231

Rossville, Ga., Hooker's operations at, I, 529, 531, II, 12, 14, 19, 23, 25

 Rough and Ready, Ga., Sherman defeats Hood near, II, 24

"Rough and Ready, Old," I, 73-75, 165-167. See also Taylor, Zachary

Rousseau, Lovell H., makes raid into Alabama, II, 89; reinforces Sherman, 492

Rowley, W. R., sent to bring up Lew Wallace's division at Shiloh, I, 278; on Grant's staff, II, 247; instructions to, betrayed to Richmond, 63

Russell, D. A., his command, II, 99; encounters Barringer's brigade, 136

Rust, Albert, joins Van Dorn in attack on Corinth, I, 345

Sabine Cross Roads, La., defeat of Banks at, II, 426

Sabine River, in camp between the Red River and, I, 31; boundary of Texas, 32

Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., in garrison at, I, 153

Sacrificios, Mex., debarkation at, I, 96

Sailor's Creek, Va., location and course, II, 328; battle of, 329, 454; depressing effect of the battle on the Confederates, 550

St. Augustine, Fla., in Union hands, II, 54, 308
St. Francis River, movement against the enemy on the, 129
St. Louis, Mo., Grant reports for duty at, I, 25; visits to, 30, 36, 153, 155, 187-190, 234, 235, II, 43; farming near, I, 167, 168; in the real-estate business in, 168; a candidate for office in, 168; damaged by the U.S. arsenal at, 187;cession spirit in, 189; hauling down the rebel flag in, 189, 190; office in, 205; ordered to report at, 210; Gen. Preuss reports at, 212; visit to Halleck at, 234, 235; transportation for Sherman's army from, 357; collecting boats from, 386; sending supplies to Sherman from, 519; visit to F. D. Grant at, II, 42; The Mississippi in Union hands from its mouth to, 386; "St. Louis," gunboat, at Fort Donelson, 247
Saline River, Steele's battle on the, II, 427
Saliary, N. C., Stoneman's expedition against, II, 422, 458
Salt River, service on the, I, 199-201
Saltillo, Mex., I, 66, 82
Saltville, Va., Crook's operations at, II, 58, 61, 403; Burbridge's expedition against, 438; Stoneman's expedition against, 434
San Augustin Tiaipan, Mex., occupation of, I, 87, 124
San Antonio, Tex., paying off troops at, I, 47; trip from Corpus Christi to, 47-53; Mexican massacre at, 49; situation, 109; Grant's brigade at, 102, 110; battle of, 111, 112
San Antonio River, I, 48, 51, 52
San Cosme garita, the, I, 116, 117; assault on, 129-133; the gun in the belfry at, 123, 124
Sanders, J. C. C., II, 102
Sanders, John, at battle of Monteroy, I, *82
Sand Mountain, Hood crosses, II, 431
San Francisco, Cal., arrival of the Fourth Infantry at, I, 153; the city in 1852, 150-161; in 1853, 165, 166; gambling in city lots in, 165; the city in 1854, 166
San Francisco, the, at Vicksburg, I, 452
San Juan de Ulloa, Mex., I, 96, 97
San Patricio, Indian massacres at, I, 48; settlement at, 52
Santa Anna, A. L. de, capture of, by Texans, I, 83; treaty with Texas, 33, 34; massacres by, 34; commanding Mexican forces at Cerro Gordo, 99; wonderful march by, 102; negotiations with, 114, 115; evacuates the City of Mexico, 124, 134
Santo Domingo, the question of annexation of, II, 393
Savannah, Ga., preparations for campaign against, II, 32; movements to and from proposed and executed, 230-233, 272, 276, 429, 430, 441; Sherman's march to, 240, 247; torpedoes near, 247, 258; investment of, 257-259; opening communication with the Union fleet at, 248; strength, 259; importance of capture of, 259; topography, 259, 251; evacuation of, 251; destruction of the navy-yard, and capture of stores at, 251, 252; capture of, 252; blockade-runner at, 252; turned over to Gen. Foster, 271; news of the capture of, in the North, 271; Simon Graper put in charge of abandoned and captured property at, 271; Sherman clears up in, 275; intriguing at, 276; distance of Goldsboro from, 282; Sherman goes to, 374; troops sent to, 420; occupation of, 431; Foster's expedition against the railroad between Charleston and, 431; anticipating Sherman's arrival at, 440
Savannah River, Grant reports for duty at, I, 271; C. F. Smith sick at, 271, 279; troops at, 272; advance on Pittsburg Landing from, 273; headquarters at, 275; Nelson at, 276; price of is expected at, 277; McComb's march to, 292
Savannah River, Sherman's operations on the, II, 231, 276, 431
Scales, Alfred M., II, 102
Schenck, Capt., commanding the "Ohio," I, 154
Schofield, John M., troops sent to, I, 455; commanding in East Tennessee, II, 43; relieves Foster, 45; unable to move for lack of supplies, 44; commanding department under Sherman, 54; commanding the Department of the Ohio, 81, 422; commanding at Knoxville, 82; strength, 82; Sherman's plan for his advance, 83; movement from Knoxville, 83; successes at Kennesaw, 87; blames Palmer for failure of operations, 92; disputed seniority between Palmer and, 92; ordered to reinforce Thonns, 238; Thomas's orders to, before Franklin, 254; Hood turns his position on the right at Columbia, 254; strength before Franklin, 254; retreats to Franklin, 255; defeats Hood at Franklin, 255, 432; retreats to Nashville, 255, 256, 433; strength, 274; ordered to Annapolis, 274, 292; retreats to Humpington, 275, 441; arrives at Annapolis, 280; Grant makes tour of inspection with, 280, 440; sent to Cape Fear River, 280; seize the Wilmington and Charlotte-ville railroad, 281; to land troops at Smithville, 281; at Goldsboro, 283, 441, 442, 446; moves with Sherman against Johnston, 422; operations at Augusta, 439, 442; Roost, 432; ordered to Chattanooga, 431; reaches Johnsonville, 442; commanding at Pulaski, 432; ordered East, 430; reaches Washington, 439; placed under Sherman's orders, 439; to command the Department of North Carolina, 439; sent to Fort Fisher and New Bern, 439; instructions as to cooperation with Sherman, 439, 440; to secure role at Washington, 440; captures Wilmington, 441; to reinforce Sherman, 441; commanding the Twenty-third Corps, 441; Sherman opens communications with, 442
Scott, Sir Walter, Grant's fondness for works of, I, 20
Scott, Winfield, visits West Point, I, 22; political aspirations of, *90, 91; difficulties concerning his appointment to command in Mexico, 90-93; sent to Mexico, 91-93; opposes Taylor's plan of the war, 22; deceived by the Administration, 92; withdraws regular troops from Taylor, 92-94; arrives at Camargo, 93; size of his army, 98, 99; plans the capture of Cerro Gordo, 100, 101; reduction of his army at Japapa, 101; at Puebla, 104; handcapable of want of troops, 105; strength at Puebla, 105; contrasted with Taylor, 105-107; personal characteristics and military character, 105-107, 153; position at Ayora, 109; reconciliations Contreras, 110; strategy and tactics at Churubusco, 112, 113; reasons for not entering City of Mexico, 114; declares armistice at an end, 115; occupies Tacubuyea,115; estrangement between Gen. Worth and, 117; assigns capture of Chaputeppee to Pillow, 120; captures City of Mexico, 123, 126; enters the city, 126, 127; his success answers an answer to criticism, 129; his tactics compared with Gen. T. S. J. of his personnel of his army, 130; prepares for prolonged occupation of Mexico, 132, 133; censure by the soldiers; Home, 133; affairs, to remove him, 134; activity of Pillow, Worth, and Duncan to, 134; hostility of the Administration to, 134, 135; relieved of command, 135; later years of, 135; defeated; General Presidency, 136; difficulty of providing clothing for the army, 140; system of tactics taught at West Point, 203; Lee's chief of staff in Mexico, 11, 341
INDEX

503

Sheridan's visit in the preparation for the movement, 279; Grant promoted Confederate crosses, 1864, the passes; confidence in movement, 138

Grant in command, 1864, the passes; confidence in movement, 138

Grant promoted Confederate crosses, 1864, the passes; confidence in movement, 138

Semmes, Raphael, at capture of City of Mexico, 1, 121

Seven-Mile Creek, Pope at, 1, 313

Seventeenth Corps, position at Lake Providence, 1, 530; center of the Army of the Tennessee, 384; at Brunesburg, 461, 463; in assault on Vicksburg, 445; in right wing of Sherman's army, 11, 214; commanded by Gen. Blair, 244; part of, sent from Vicksburg to Big Black River, 212

Seventh Army-corps, in cooperation with Banks, 11, 217

Seventh U. S. Infantry, at Corpus Christi, 1, 44; 110th Illinois second lieutenant in the, 53; Grant transferred back to the Fourth Infantry from, 53, 54; Maj. Brown killed, 72

Sheridan in, views as to the duration of the war, 1, 377; Grant informed of the attack on, 1, 358

Seymour, T., II, 99

Shady Grove Church, Va., movements near, 1, 105, 188.

Shafer, Alexander, II, 99

Shellisland, Tex., debarkation of the Fourth Infantry at, 1, 373

Shenandoah Valley, the importance of, to the Confederates, 11, 57, 204, 205, 207, 209, 214, 220; plan for Ord's operations in, 61; Sheridan's operations in, 94, 206, 235-237, 279, 283, 358, 445; reinforcing Lee from, 144; Ewell sent to, 181; Early's operations in, 181, 215, 216, 420; left open to Early, 135, 416; Hunter's operations of, 194, 214, 215, 415; bad policy of Stanton and Halleck concerning, 265; moving troops toward, 207; visit to Sheridan in, 214, 215; Wright left in command of, 214, 420; withdrawn from, 219; virtual closing of the campaign in, 224; Confederate troops sent to Richmond from, 224; proposed movements for Hunter's forces in, spring of 1865, 220; proposed plan of campaign from, in spring of 1865, 220; Sheridan moves on the James from, 273; Confederate force in, 399; Sigel's operations in, 403, 411; necessity of breaking up railroad communication between Richmond and, 409; engagement at Snicker's Ferry, 417; to be depicted, 418, 420; the enemy's last attempt to invade the North via, 230; withdrawal of the enemy from, 443; Sheridan to move toward Sherman from, 433, 444

Shepherdstown, Va., Sigel retreats across the Potomac at, 1, 416

Sheridan, P. H., brings news of Bragg to Corinth, 1, 322; meeting with, at Corinth, 323; his early career, 333, 334; relations with Haleck, 333, 334; victory at Bentonville, 334; promoted brigadier-general, 334; reaches and fortifies Louisville, 334; in action at Fort Wood, 11, 3; in battle of Chattanooga, 15-18; superseded Gen. Pleasanton, 69; commanding Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, 66, 97, 99; first raid on Lee's communications, 56-80, 127, 188, 114, 150, 405, 406; crosses the North Anna, 78, 414; destroys railroad at Ashland, 78, 496; passes the outer defenses of Richmond, 78, 406; defeats Stuart at Yellow Tavern, 78, 406; crosses the Chickahominy, 77, 78, 406; at Haxall's Landing, 78, 496; crosses the Pamunkey, 78, 487; at White House, 79, 414; campaign in the reaches 489 moves 268 reinforces 268 recommends 268
INDEX

comexpedition 268 to 268 reinforced 268 defeats 268 con-letter 268
at 268
cooperaseness, 201, Grant 268
Charlestown, 420, Virginia 268 dered 268
dety 268 feats 268
cavalry, 420, Virginia 268
dated 223, 222 informed 208, 208
President's 222
Evans 307, 307
Sherman, 305, 453
Smithland, 305, 305
Ferry, 420
President's 420
Lee's 58, 58
left, 358, 358 characteristics, 358, 358
instructed, 453, 453 on Wyacksbrough, 294, strength, 294, with-red, 316, 432, reinforced by Humphreys' on Wyacksbrough, 294, strength, 294, with-ment against Wyacksbrough, 294, strength, 294, their attack 432; ordered to move out on the Davyville road, 316, 432, reinforced by Humphreys' draws from the Yazoo, 26; distrusts McClernand's ability, 367; expedition up Steele's Bayou, 378; on Black Bayou, 378, 329; commanding left wing of Army of the Tennessee, 358; advance upon New Carthage, 392; ordered to destroy Haines's Bluff, 398; withdraws from Haines's Bluff, 406; at Bruinsburg, 401; disapproves plan of cutting loose from base of supplies, 398; proceeds to Corinth, 416; marches from Grand Gulf to Hickman's Ferry, 413; at Big Sandy and Auburn, 413; at Fourteen-Mile Creek, 415; at Raymond, 420; march on Jackson, 420; at battle of Jackson, 421-423; Johnson's plan to defeat, 424; destroys Jackson, 424, 427; march from Jackson to Dolton, 428, 437; goes to Bridgeport, 437, 441:156-158; conversation with an 11th Wisconsin, 441, 442, 453; prophetic view of the Vicksburg campaign, 442, 453; in investment of Vicksburg, 445, 448; sacrifices in favor of McClernand, 448; Northern difficulties to, before Vicksburg, 453; credit due to, for the Vicksburg campaign, 453; disclaims the credit, 455; loyal support from, 453, 454; renews the order of the president, 453, 454; complains of McClernand's congratulatory order, 457; assigned to command of forces from Haines's Bluff to the Big Black, 460-462; ordered to displace Haines from Mississippi, 473, 475, 482; commanding at Haines's Bluff, 482; on the Big Black, 482; besieges Jackson, 482, 483; line from Haines to Vicksburg, 482; to Grindall, 514; ordered back to Vicksburg, 484; renders assistance during Grant's disablment, 487; sent to reinforce Rosecrans, 491; plans to command the Army of the Tennessee, 509; leaves Memphis for Corinth, 511; repairs roads, 511, 512; ordered to Stevenson, 512; enters, 512; notified of Confederate movement toward Nashville, 519; movement and positions on the Tennessee, 512-519, 522, 524, 51, 52; to halt Gen. Dodge at Athens, 5, 513; urged forward, 513; plan of battle, 515; order to the Army of the Tennessee, 517; meeting with Grant at Chattanooga, 518; to cooperate with Thomas, 519; plan of battle for, 520; trip from Chattanooga to Bridgeport, 522; with the advance at Brown's Ferry, 523; reaches his position undiscovered, 525; ready for action at Brown's Ferry, II, 4; in battle of Missionary Ridge and Chattanooga, 5, 7, 10, 12, 13, 15, 16, 18, 29, 20, 53; at Graysville, 25, 26; at Ringgold, 26; destroys railroad between Dalton and Knoxville, 27; march to Knoxville, 27, 28-33; proposes to assist Burnside in driving Longstreet out of Tennessee, 27; proceeds to clear the east bank of the Mississippi, 39; sends scouting expeditions from Vicksburg, 40; moves against Polk at Meridian, 41; narrowly escapes capture at Decatur, 41; proposes to move against Shreveport, 42; Thomas to cooperate with, 42, 43; cooperation with Banks, 42, 49, 58, 61, 65, 84, 400, 425; recommended by Meade as his successor, 46; commanding the Military Division of the Mississippi, 48, 54, 399; meeting with, at Nashville, 47, 48; discussion of the spring campaign, 48, 49; Bull declines to serve under, 50; con fronted by Johnston in Georgia, 50, 399; movement against and capture of Atlanta, 59, 82, 83, 89, 90, 92, 93, 210, 213, 243, 421; sends troops against Forrest, 63, 424, 435; orders to advance on May 5, 1861, 54; limits of his military division, 81; assumes duties at Nashville, 81; his three armies for the Atlanta campaign, 82; accumulating supplies at Chattanooga, 82, 83; moves on Dalton, 81, 82; halts, 85; reinforced by Blair, 86; gains possession of the Chattanooga, 87; 423; sends Stoneman on raid, 90; unsuccessful attempt to capture is broad out 93; 92; blames Palmer for failure of operations, 92; Wheeler cuts his communications with the North, 92; value of his obli gations; moves, 93; on Mosley's reinforcements; news of his success in the North, 94; 95; 98 according to program of spring campaign, 106; encounter with Johnston, 119; recommended for major-generalship, 15; 8, A., 139; drives Johnston out of Dalton, 140; captures Kingston and crosses the Etowah, 141; anecdot of the Atlanta campaign, 144; retreats, 146; pulls back to the right, 147; harasses the enemy in Georgia, 149; asks for raw recruits, 210; proposed plan of campaign, 210; in spring of 1863, 230, 233; directs his army to the sea, 230; his march to the sea, 231, 237, 240, 423-431; Pres. Davis's views of his position, 228-230; opposed by Hood, 229, 229 to 230, 428, 429, 430; takes advantage of Davis's absence, 230; sweeps the whole State of Georgia, 231, 430; asked for views, 231, 232; sends troops to Thomas, 232, 431; correspondence with Thomas, 232, 431; view of the campaign through Georgia, 233; 235; his march to the sea, 231, 237, 240, 423-431; views the battle of Allatoona, 237; at ronies to cut loose from his base, 228; proposal that he destroy Hood before starting to the sea, 240; his campaign through Georgia definitely approved, 240, 238; commences to think of destroying Atlanta, 241; his "hummers," 242-244; reaches Milledgeville, 244; as depicted by Southern newspapers, 245; anxiety to join Johnston in Georgia, 246; movement via Waynesboro and Louisville, 246; resumes march from Milledgeville, 246; advances prisoners over torpedoes, 246; communicates with Field, 248, 249; Grant's confidence in, 249, 250; invests and captures Savannah, 231, 431, 440; suggests destruction of railroad back to Chattanooga, 252; question of the credit due for his march to the sea, 252, 253; the President's anxiety concerning his cutting loose from his base, 253; proposed northern campaign, 271-273, 276, 428, 430, 440, 441; news of his capture of Savannah in the North, 271; visitors to, at Savannah, 271; results of his march through Georgia, 273; commencement of the final march, 273; in the same campaign, 273; and Gen. Porter to seize points near Charleston, 273; provisions for cooperat-
INDEX

...}

Sibley, H. H., excursions in Mexico with, I, 142 et seq.; in the Egyptian service, 142
Sierra Madre Mountains, entrance to Mexico through, I, 76
Sigfrid, Joshua K., II, 100
Signal corps, work in the field, II, 119
"Silver Wave," the, running the batteries at Vicksburg, I, 390
Simpson, George, reports probability of capturing Fort Fisher, II, 457
Simpson, Hannah, I, 6; marries Jesse R. Grant, 7
Simpson, John, I, 5; settles in Clermont County, 16, 6
Simpson, Mary, I, 6
Simpson, Samuel, I, 6, 7
Simpson, Sarah, I, 6
Simpson family, the, in Pennsylvania, I, 6; in Ohio, 5, 7
Sixteenth Army-corps, changes in the, II, 234; part of, sent from Vicksburg to Red River, 425, 426; moves against Mobile, 458; invests Spanish Fort, 458
Sixth Army-corps, organization of, II, 99; crosses Germanna Ford, 98, 468; moves from Spotsylvania, 147; ordered to the South Anna, 148; position, May 26, 150; ordered toward Hanover Town, 155, 468; moves against the Weldon railroad, 190; in investment of Petersburg, 191; request for Sheridan to command the, 236; movement April 6, 1865, 330; loses its... commander (Sedgwick, 405; reaches the North Anna, 406; in battle of Cold Harbor, 408; ordered to City Point, 413; ordered to Baltimore and Washington, 416; ordered to Harper's Ferry, 417; returned to Army of the Potomac in action, Mar. 25, 1865, 443; pursues Lee toward Danville, 453, 454; in battle of Sailor's Creek, 454; at Farmville, 454. See also McClellan, V., Virginia.

Slater'sville, N. C., Stoneman's raid at, II, 458.

Slaughter, W. A., trying experience of, 1, 157, 208; killed at Antieut, 158 and Rain- mond, 426; in battle of Champion's Hill, 428, 429, 432, 434; ordered to reinforce Sherman, 433; receives and consults with Gena Bowen, 436, 437; at meeting between the Mexican war, 115: the burning issue of, 170, 171; the divine institution of, 173; the influence of the cotton-gin on, 179; in the South, 179, 180, 507, 566; Lincoln's determination to abolish, II, 289, 303; cause of the civil war, 356, 367.

Slaves, liberation of the, 1, 171; dangers of an insurrection of, 508.

Slocum, Henry W., commanding Twelfth Corps, I, 503; ordered to reinforce Rose- crans, 503; occupies Atlanta, II, 93; commanding left wing of Sherman's army, 234; in battle of Stone Mountain, 240; threatened Augusta, 240; attacked by Johnston at Bentonville, 442.

"Slugs," on the Pacific Coast, I, 163.

Snakepox, fatality of, among Indians, I, 163, 164.

Smith, A. J., at battle of Port Gibson, 403; borrowing a horse from, 407; ordered to attack Port Gibson, 429; at Chat- tanooga, 426; in battle of Champion's Hill, 428, 429, 432, 434; ordered to reinforce Sherman, 433; receives and consults with Gena Bowen, 436, 437; at meeting between Smith, C. F., commanding at West Point, I, 22; at Resaca de la Palma, 26; assigned to command at Paducah, 234; ordered to move against Columbus, 219; his district merged in the District of Cairo, 233; to threaten Forts Hume and Henry, 234; in expedition against Fort Henry, 235, 238, 239; ordered to guard Forts Henry and Heume, 244, 245; in investment of Fort Donelson, 245, 251, 252; receives proposal of surrender from Buckner, 255; promoted major-general of volunteers, 250; credited by Halleck with capture of Fort Donel- son, 260; Grant approves his promotion, 260; at Chickasawhay, 263; in command at Clarksville, 263; letter from Buell to, 263; criticism of Buell's order, 254; goes to Buell's assistance, 255; personal characteristics, 270, 271; death of, 271; commanding division of Army of the Tennessee, 274; sickness of, 274, 275; position at Pittsburg Landing, 275.

Smith, Dr., a dangerous introduction to, I, 322.

Smith, Dr., reports conversation with Gen. Emwel, II, 332, 333.

Smith, E. Kirby, commanding Trans-Mississippi Department, II, 210; confronted by Steele, 210; surrender of, 368, 459; Pope sent against, 446.

Smith, G. W., at Cerro Gordo, I, 100; commanding Corry, 507; reconnoitering the line of Sherman's march, 522; appointed chief engineer of the Military Division of the Mississippi, II, 4; valuable services in Chattanooga campaign, 31; promoted major-general, 31, 60; commanding Butler's right wing, 58, 60, 402; opposition to his promotion, 60; at White House, 164, 159, 580; under order to command with, 159; strength, 163; in battle of Cold Harbor, 163, 164, 166-168, 408; sent to reinforce Butler, 173, 184, 185, 186, 410; operations near Petersburg, 185-188, 412, 413; brought from Bermuda Hundred to join the Army of the Potomac, 408.

Smith, W. Sooy, brings reinforcements to Vicksburg, I, 456; ordered to Haines's Bluff, 456; ordered to move against Fort- rest, II, 40; unsuccessful encounter with Forrest, 11.

Smithfield, N. C., J. E. Johnston retreats to, II, 412.

"Smithfield," the, sunk at Plymouth, I, 467.

Smithland, Ky., occupation of, I, 215; Sher- man's campaign at, 239; communication with Cairo, 268.

Smith's Plantation, La., route to Perkins's plantation from, I, 389.

Smithville, N. C., Schofield to land troops at, II, 281.
INDEX

- Smuggling, on Mexican frontier, I, 42
- Smyth, Thomas A., II, 97
- Snake Creek, its course, condition, Union positions on, etc., I, 278-281, 284, 285
- Snake Creek Gap, Ga., McPherson's operations at, II, 85, 423
- Snicker's Ferry, Va., engagement at, II, 410
- Snicker's Gap, Va., getting information to Sheridan through, II, 214
- Snow-blindness, I, 144
- Soldiers, value of seasoned, II, 40
- Soldiers' Homes, origin of, I, 133
- South, the, its real position, I, 175; clamor for secession in, 177-181; slavery in, 179, II, 366, 387; the class of "divine right" in, I, 175; inconsistency in, 189; perils of Union sentiment in, 181; its military resources contrasted with those of the North, 230, II, 551-553; admiration for, I, 370; benefited by the war, 507, 508; contrasted with the North as regards license of speech and press, II, 31; a military camp, 228, 523, 533; weary of the war, 228; Lincoln's hospitality toward, 229; consecration in, 292, 352-354, 368, 339; exaggerations in reports of battles in the, 351; the press in, 352, 410; the negroes in, during the war, 393
- South, Johnson's attitude toward, 358-361, 370; the solid, 366, 367; the assassination of Lincoln a loss to, 369; Garrisoning the, 373; the press of, on Sherman's operations, 375; military despotism in, 381; See also CONFEDERATE STATES
- South Anna, movements on the, II, 148, 153, 295, 408
- South Carolina, secession of, I, 173, 183; Union holdings in, II, 63, 398; Sherman's march through, 272, 278, 376, 439-441, 444; Admiral Dahlgren commanding on the coast of, 273; importance to the enemy, 273; reasons for laying a heavy hand on, 276, 277; Sherman to "eat the vitals out of," 278, 444; J. E. Johnston put in command of all troops in, 290, 284; Stoneman's operations in, 281, 292, 447; the boldest of secession, 293; destruction of railroads in, 294; reinforcements for Butler from, 402; Schofield and Sherman in, 493, 440; Thomas ordered to raid, 442
- South Chickamauga River, its course, etc., I, 502, 520; operations on, 520, 521, II, 5, 6
- Southeast Missouri, Grant assigned to command District of, I, 211, 213, 214; changing the name of the District of, 223
- South Side railroad, Va., its importance, II, 190, 363, 304; operations against and movements on, 194, 225, 231, 299, 310, 312, 315, 316, 317, 322-324, 407, 413, 414, 422, 449, 456, 453
- Spain, imposes restrictions on Mexican trade, I, 43; share in the Mexican Imperial scheme, I, 388
- Spanish Fort, Ala., investment, evacuation, and capture of, II, 307, 458
- Sparta, Tenn., Thomas orders cavalry to, I, 138
- Special Orders No. 110, II, 390-392
- Spotylvania, Va., General Anderson at, I, 142, II, 123, 124; E. W. Washburne at, 68; roads to, 101, 102; march to, 119, 121, 466; Lee holds, 120, 121, 458, 462, 473; it balks Sherman's plans to capture, 122, 123; Warren's attack at, 123; Lee's mistaken notion concerning the capture of, 124; situation, 136; battle of, 126-132; Sherman's plan of occupation, 127; Upton's charge at, 130, 131; Hancey detained from the battle, 132
- Spotsylvania Court House, uncovering the road to Fredericksburg from, 143; a lesson of the battle, 144; artillery sent to Washington from, 144; movement of troops from, 147; Burnside and Sedgwick at, 147; Sedgwick killed at, 183; Sedgwick killed at, 384; effect of the battle on the enemy, 410
- Springfield, Ill., Grant accompanies troops to, I, 135; Gen. Pope mustering-officer of, 191; Grant ordered to Quincy from, I, 198; McClemand at, 390; McClemand ordered back to, 437
- Spring Hill, Tenn., Cheatham camps at, II, 259
- Stafford, L. A., II, 101
- Stager, Anson, head of the telegraphic department of the War Office, II, 35, 36
- Stanard's Ford, Va., in Confederate hands, II, 147
- Stanley, D. S., in East Tennessee, II, 43; strength, 238; sent to reinforce Thomas, 238; attack on Knoxville, 238; Thomas's train, 253; Cheatham pursues, 255; wounded at Franklin, 255; ordered to Bull Gap, 282
- Stannard, G. J., captures Fort Harrison, II, 211
- Stanton, Edwin M., authorizes McClemand to command expedition against Vicksburg, I, 358; orders Grant to Cairo, 489; meeting at Indianopolis with, 490; premonition of his death, 491; communication from C. A. Dana to, 491, 492; anxiety concerning Rosser's, 496, 497; anxiety for Burnside, 523; informed of the raising of the siege of Knoxville, II, 31; contributed the telegraph lines, 35; influence with, concerning the use of the cipher code, 36, 37; personal characteristics, 37, 356, 380, 381; promised to restore Butler to duty, 36; acquaintance with, 51; cautions Grant against ending plans to the President, 51; Grant's reticence with, 52; conferences with, 65; letter to, recommending promotions, May 13, 1864, 139; objects to giving command to Sheridan, 205; bad policy concerning the Shenandoah Valley, 205; revision of Grant's orders by, 214; promotes officers at Fort Fisher, 270; visits Sherman at Savannah, 277; interview with, 274; notified of the arrival of the Peace Commissioners, 287; informed of Lee's surrender, 347; countersigns the order calling the Virginia legislature, 356; denounces Sherman, 346, 365; Sherman resents his insults, 379; contrasted with Lincoln 389, 381; Grant's report to, July 22, 1865, 367-469
- State, sees versus the, I, 170
- State sovereignty, inconsistency in the South's doctrine of, I, 180
- Staunton, Va., a source of supplies for Lee, II, 142, 411; proposition to send Sigel to, 142; Hunter's operations at and near, 176, 177, 181, 192, 195, 411, 412; Sherman defeats Early between Charlotte and Rappahannock, 293, 445; pursuit of Early through, 426
- Steam, changes wrought by the introduction of, I, 176, II, 387
- Steam-bath, the Indians', I, 163, 164
- Steamboats, early Ohio River, I, 18; effect of the introduction of, II, 387, 388
- Steam-propeller, an early, I, 95
Steedman, J. B., reinforces Thomas, 11, 256

Steele, F., ordered to march on New Carthage, 1, 392; moves to Bolton, 428; ordered to reinforce Sherman, 473, 482; ordered to Brandon, Miss., 483; in Arkansas, 488, II, 65, 400; commanding department, under Sherman, 54; Borden's ordered to turn over defense of Red River to, 58, 61, 65; commanding the Trans-Mississippi Department, 81; confronting Kirby Smith, 316; ordered to operate with Banks, 426; junction with Thayer at Elkino's Ferry, 426; occupies Camden, 427; loss at Mark's Mill, 427; falls back to the Arkansas, 457; occupation against, the Saline River, 427; to cut off Price's retreat, 427; moves from Pensacola against Mobile, 458; invests Fort Blakely, 458

Steele's Bayou, Miss., water communications of, I, 377; Sherman's expedition up, 378; attempt to find a passage through, 377-379

Stephens, Alexander H., Vice-President of the Confederate States, II, 287; Confederate Peace Commissioner, 287, 288, 289; physical peculiarities, 288-290; Lincoln's characterization of, 290; capture of, 459

Stevenson, A. A., becomes Burnham in command, II, 218; wounded in assault on Fort Harrison, 218

Stevens, Isaac L., as Cerro Gordo, I, 100

Stevenson, Carter L., commanding Confederate forces on Lookout Creek, II, 8

Stevenson, J. D., promoted brigadier-general, I, 350; at capture of Jackson, 425

Stewart, T. G., his command, II, 100; killed at Spotsylvania, 130

Stevenson, A., meeting with Rosecrans at, I, 498; Sherman ordered to, 512, II, 39; raiding against, I, 315; garrisoned by Thomas, II, 258, 256

Stewart, A. P., with hood at Franklin, II, 254

Stiege, George H., his command, II, 101; captured, 156

Stone, Charles P. ("Stone Pachus"), trip to Popeonetepelt, I, 142-145

Stone, Roy, H., 89

Stoneeman, George, raid toward Macon, II, 90-92, 424; surrender of, 91, 92, 424; raids in and from Tennessee, 278, 281, 434, 446; to support Sherman, 483; raids toward Lynchburg, 281, 356, 367, 422, 444, 446; raid in South Carolina, 281, 282, 442; tardy movements of, 356; movements in North Carolina, 366, 442, 458; movements against the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, 366, 367; moves against Breckinridge, 434; defeats Vaughn, 434; destroys Wytheville, 434; destroys Salisbury, 434; to release prisoners at Salisbury, 458; captures Salisbury, 450; at Statesville, 458

Stone Mountain, Ga., Slocom moves to, II, 240

Stony River, Tenn., possibilities of avoiding the battle of, I, 318

Stony Creek, Va., Kautz burns railroad bridge at, II, 407; Wilson's engagement at, 415; Sheridan's movements near, 447

Strasburgh, Va., movements, engagements, etc., at, II, 72, 204, 420

Strawberry Plains, ride to Lexington, Ky., from, II, 34

Stuart, David, position at Pittsburg Landing, I, 370; expedition up Steele's Bayou, 378

Stuart, J. E. B., defeated by Sheridan at Yellow Tavern, and mortally wounded, II, 78; in battle of Wilderness, 11

Sturgis, S. D., defeated by Forrest, II, 457, 461

Stuffol, Va., Kautz's cavalry expedition from, against the Weldon railroad, II, 73, 406, 407

Sullivan, J. C., assignment to duty under Special Orders No. 110, I, 292

Suflphur Branch Treacle, Forrest captures garrison at, II, 428

Sumner, Colonel operations against Hicksford and the Weldon road, II, 447

Superstitions, Grant's, I, 23, 382, 383

Sutherland's Station, Va., battle of, II, 312, 433; troops halted

Sutler, Sherman regulates the trade of, II, 93, 94

"Suviah," the, mutiny on board of, I, 40

Sweat-bath, the, Lincobi's, I, 163, 164

Sweitzer, Jacob B., II, 28

Swinton, William, unpleasant incident concerning, II, 68-70; sentenced to be shot, 70; expelled from the lines, 70

Ta River, the, II, 126

Tactics, Grant's standing in, at West Point, I, 20, 293; brushing up, 295

Taccubaya, Mex., the U. S. army at, II, 114, 115, 119, 140

Tallahatchie River, movements, etc., on the, I, 332, 335, 356, 358, 375

Tanning, Grant's desultion of the trade, I, 9

Taylor, Richard, attack on Milliken's Bend by, I, 456; expected to aid Pemberton in escaping to Mississippi, 364; surrender of, II, 365, 459; defeated at Cane River, 426; defends Mobile, 436

Taylor, Gen. Zachary, in command of the Army of Occupation in Texas, I, 34, 44; personal, size, equipment, etc., of his army, 45, 59, 64, 67-69, 80, 130; provides duty for officers, 47; methods of moving troops pursued by, 59, 79; his tactics compared with General Scott's, 129; probable views of the war, 60, 127; personal characteristics, 60, 72-75, 105-107; expedition to Point Isabel, 64-67; speculations regarding his feelings at Palo Alto, 68; volunteers for, 72; enters Mexico, 52; reviews his army at Corpus Christi, 72; actual rank in Mexican war, 73, 74; visit of Cuauhtemoc, 74; encamped at Walnut Springs, 79; establishes battery at Monterey, 82; a Presidential candidate, 81; regular troops withdrawn from, 92-94; battle of Buena Vista, I, 92, 93, 102; failure to meet Gen. Scott at Camargo, 53; elected President, 82, 136; contrasted with Scott, 105-107; deserters from his army at Churubusco, 129

Taylor, Colonel, intercepted letter from, II, 325

Taylor's Ford, Va., II, 155, 156

Tennessee, difficulties with, in the Fort Donelson campaign, I, 283; effect of the introduction of the, II, 387, 388

Telegraph corps, the, work in the field, II, 117, 178

Telegraph operator, a rebel, I, 268

Telegraph road, I, 147, 150
Tennessee, secession of, I, 183: the fate of, depending on Fort Donelson, 266; Confederate disasters in, 207; the enemy driven from West, 317; possibilities of avoiding, 318; blocking for, 319; horse-kicks of Grant's district in, 326; dangers in West, 336; Confederate attempts to reinforce Bragg in, 336, 337; anxiety of the authorities of, I, 292; the fort, 295; demands union of, 297; Victoria seeks a separate command in, I, 349; army of defense of, 359; Bragg encountering Rosser's forces, 448; Burnside draws supplies from East, 511, II, 29; movement of, Fort Donelson, West, I, 514; measures to relieve East, 524; the fate of, II, 30; Confederate possession of, 32, 43, 399; loyal people in, 35; proposal to drive Longstreet out of, 37, 43; Schofield commanding in East, 43; Thomas's operations in, 43, 238, 429, 443, 416; Union holdings in, 53, 393; Forrest's raids in, 57, 63, 229, 236, 421; McPherson guarding, 82; proposed plan of campaign from, for spring of 1865, 236; Wheeler's operations in, 223, 243: Stoneman's raids in and from, 278, 281, 337; robbing of, I, 554; protecting East, 398; fears of Hood's invasion of, 429; pursuit of Hood stopped by rains in, 433, 443; Breckinridge's operations in East, 434

Tennessee and Virginia railroad, raids on the, II, 403, 411

Tennessee River, the, occupying positions on, I, 215; Confederate posts on, 232; its mouth included in the District of Cairo, 233; C. F. Smith ordered up, 234; operations on, planned or executed, 231-236, 240, 265, 272 et seq., 301, 340, 501, 517-521, 11, 83, 84, 136; Federal forces on, I, 265; the strategic center of, 272; the National left on, 291; the gunboats on, at Pittsburg Landing, 285, 363; A. S. Johnston's plan of crossing, 299; the Federal control from the South Eastport, 317; Rosser's puts Bragg south of, 493; position of National troops on, 494; situation of Chattanooga on, 502; expedition to Brown's Ferry, 504, 505; securing the bridges at Chattanooga and Brown's Ferry, 506; opened from Bridgeport to Lookout Valley, 505; navigation of, 505, 506; junction of Chattanooga Creek with, 509; junction of the North and South Chickamauga with, 520; getting orders from Sherman via, 512; the Memphis and Charleston railroad at, 513; Sherman crosses, 521, 524, II, 5; high water in, I, 522, 524, II, 4, 29; completion of bridge over, 6; Howard and Sherman meet in the middle of, 7; the Federal line on, 9; movements on, for relief of Burnside, 19, 24; Sherman's camp and movements on, 27, 30, 32, 38; a trip up, 34; Union holdings on, 53, 398; gunboats on, 230; Hood's movements on, 239, 240, 254, 274, 430, 432, 439; fears of Thomas's having to abandon the line of, 257; Wheeler driven south of, 424; Forrest's movements on, 423, 432; the line of, to be firmly held, 431, 432; Thomas stops pursuit of Hood at, 434

Tensas, Ala., Steele cuts railroad to Montgomery from, II, 458

Tensas Bayou, repulse of Taylor across the, I, 215, 222; at Lake Providence, 373; a waterway for the enemy, 374

Tenth Army-Corps, threatening movement against Richmond, II, 299, 283; reinforces Butler, 406; at capture of Fort Harrison, 423; Terrett, John C., mortally wounded at Monterey, I, 87

Terry, A. H., captures blockade-runners at Fort Fisher, II, 262; selected to command second Fort Fisher expedition, 267, 268, 269, 457; attacks and captures the fort, 268-270; reinforces Ames, 270; promoted major-General of volunteers, and brigadier-General U. S. A., 270; moves on Wilmington, 275; reinforced from Thomas's command, 281; sends supplies to Sherman at Fayetteville, 284; reinforces Sherman, 285; services at Fort Fisher, 384; military and personal characteristics, 384; Grant's instructions to, for second expedition, 435, 438; Grant confers with, 490; bridges the Neuse River, 442

Terry, William R., II, 101

Texas, John Walker's opinion of, I, 16; annexation of, 27, 39, 52-34, 36, 134; boundary between, 534, 535; the, 1833; slavery in, 33; the Army of Occupation in, 34; the country between Matamoras and Corpus Christi, 46; wild horses in, 46, 47; the expedition between Mexico and, 49; negotiations for cession of, 115; no claim to the right of secession, 174; secession of, 183; Pemberton's conscripts from, 349; the President's desire to gain a foothold in, 484; Banks ordered to abandon, II, 58, 61, 406; in the hands of the enemy, 398; Sheridan goes to, 459

Tezccoo, Lake, I, 108, 128

Thayer, John M., at Fort Donelson, I, 244, 247, 251; junction of Steele and, at Elkkin's Ferry, II, 436

Third U. S. Dragoons, in Mexican war, I, 105

Third U. S. Infantry, in garrison at St. Louis, I, 35; ordered to Fort Jessup, 27, 31; at Corpus Christi, 41; losses at Monterey, 85

Thirteenth Army-corps, at the Yazoo River, I, 566; right wing of the Army of the Tennessee, 330; orders for attack on Grand Gulf, 335, 356; at Bruinsburg, 401, 402; McClelland's congratulatory order to, 457; McClelland relieved of command of, 457; sent to Banks, 486; invests Spanish Fort, II, 458

Thomas, E. L., II, 102

Thomas, George H., wins battle of Mill Springs, I, 234, 265; absent from Shiloh, 362; commands right wing of the Army of the Tennessee, 367; position in front of Corinth, 314; ordered to reinforce Buell, 344; Rosser's superseded by, 421; his stand at Chickamauga, 491; retreats to Chattanooga, 494; assigned to command of the Army of the Cumberland, 497; ordered to hold Chattanooga at all hazards, 497; advised to put wagon-road to Bridgeport in repair, 498; Grant's headquarters with, at Chattanooga, 499; joins in inspection of situation at Chattanooga, 501; orders concentration of reinforcements at Bridgeport, 504; his military character, 516, II, 43, 44, 256, 257, 274, 279, 281, 359, 371, 433; ordered to attack, Nov. 7, 1863, II, 436; plan for attack on Missionary Ridge, 517
INDEX

511

518: orders cavalry to Sparta, 518; to cooperate with Sherman, 519; plan of operations at Chattanooga, 520; recom- menders to the line of Sherman's march, 522; ordered to move on Nov. 23, 1863, 523, 524; in battle of Chattanooga, II, 3, 4, 7, 9, 12, 14, 15, 17; ordered to the relief of Burnside, 19, 24; ordered to start Granger toward Knoxville, 25; ordered to hold back Granger, 25; delays starting Granger, 26; left in command at Chattanooga, 27, 28; ordered to threaten J. E. Johnston, 28; cooperation with Sherman, 42, 422; ordered to send troops into East Tennessee, 43; ordered to capture Dalton, 43; complaints of defects in Hood's command, 435; commanding Department under Sherman, 54, 51, 422; commanding Department of the Cumberland, 51, 422; strength, 83; movement to Ringgold, 83; proposed plan of campaign for 1865, 236; ordered back to Chattanooga and Nashville, 233, 431; levies from the Northwest sent to, 238, 429; to hold Tennessee and Kentucky, 238, 239; Sherman reinforces, 338, 431, 453; strength and garrisons, 338, 239; Hood left to his care, 240; strength compared with Hood, 240; reconnoiters near Nashville toward Schofield before Franklin, 254; fails to reinforce Schofield at Franklin, 255, 420, 433; reinforcements for, 255; prepares to receive Hood, 256; captures troops in position at Nashville, 256; fears of the enemy's cladding, 256-258; letters from Grant to, 257, 258; advised to arm citizen employees, 257; lose opportunity to cross Tennessee and coast to Franklin, 257; urged to attack Hood, 257-259; announces his preparations to move, 258, 259; threatened with removal, 259, 433; fails to get Hod a crossing of the Cumberland, 433; proposed movement of, from the north, 271; Sherman asks to have his campaign in Alabama, 274; reinforcement of Canby from Memphis, 279, 430; persuasion of Sherman and Grant, 276; his action at Nashville disapproved by Sherman and Grant, 276; ordered to send a cavalry force into Mississippi, 278; ordered to move south, 280; countermanded, 281; ordered to send Stoneman toward Lynchburg, 281, 422; reinforcements sent to Terry from, 281; contemplated movement of toward Lynchburg, 282; ordered to send the Fourth Corps to Bull Gap, 282; operations against Buzza red's Roost, 423; unsuccessful assault on Kenesaw Mountain, 423; endeavors to drive Forrest, 423; fears that he cannot prevent Hood's going north, 430; routs Hood's army, 430; delays at Nashville, 430; orders concentration of troops against Breckinridge, 434; to collect troops at Eastport, 439; to Schofield, 439; to raid South Carolina, 442; letters to, 442, 443, 446; informed of Hood's expedition, 443, 444; ordered to defend Hood in Tennessee, 443; advised to send a cavalry expedition south, 443; to repair railroads in Tennessee, 446; base of supplies at Knoxville, 446; to occupy East Tennessee, 446; proposal that his campaign in North Carolina, 446

Thomas, Henry G., II, 100

Thomas, Lorenzo, adjutant-general, U. S., letter to, I, 191, "192

Thomas, Jacob, voyage of espionage, 1, 365

Thompson, M. Jeff., Grant ordered against, II, 211; operations in Missouri, 211, 213, 214

Thompson's Hill. See Fort Gibson.

Thompson's plantation, Miss., action at, II, 402

Thornton, Seth B., captured by Mexicans, 1, 861

Tidball, John C., his command, II, 191; instruction at Petersburg, March 24, 1865, 285

Tilghman, Lloyd, evacuates Paducah, I, 216; defense of Fort Henry, 238; capture of, 239

Toombs, requiring the habit, I, 42; restrictions on use of, at West Point, 42; Mexican trade in, 42-44

Tod, George, I, 3, 4

Tod, Gov., I, 3

Tod, Mrs., I, 3

Tod's Tavern, Va., Gregg ordered to, II, 169; Hancock's movements toward, 212, 213, 215; Sheridan's actions at, III, 129, 122; Cluster drives the enemy from Catharpin Furnace to, 115; orders for night march to, 119, 120; a night ride to, 120, 121; Early at, 124, 125; Moff at, 128

Tolnaca, H., occupation of, I, 123

Tompkins, C. H., II, 99

Tompkins, J. A., II, 100

Torbert, A. T., commanding rear-guard, north of Mackall Creek, II, 226; his command, 99; movement toward Hanover, 156; crosses the Pammukie, 498; sent to Sheridan at Harper's Ferry, 419

Torrance, Confederate, on roads, II, 247, 248

Totoptomoy River, the movements and engagements on, II, 158, 161, 165, 183

Toucey, Isaac, Secretary of the Navy, seizes the navy, I, 214

Townsend, E. D., discovers; missing letter, I, 192

Tower, Z. B., at Cerro Gordo, I, 100; excursion in Mexico, 142 et seq; supervises fortifications of Nashville, II, 256

Townson, Nathan, on court of inquiry in Gen. Scott's case, I, 157

Traders, the nuisance of, within the lines, I, 331

Trans-Mississippi Department, surrender of, the, III, 369

Treason, open, in the South, I, 151; question of punishment for, II, 217; in the Chicago Convention, 217; Pres. Johnson's denunciations of, 329

Trenton, Ga., plan for Sherman's march from Whitesides to, I, 517

Trevilian Station, Va., Sheridan's operations at, II, 193, 194, 444, 415

Trist, Nicholas P., commissioner to negotiate with Mexico, I, 314; negotiations with Mexico, 114, 115, 134; recalled to Washington, 134

Tulipany River, Foster's position on the, II, 429

Tullahoma, Miss., reinforcements for J. E. Johnston from, I, 419; Forrest cuts the railroad at, II, 428

Tupelo, Miss., troops ordered to Chattanooga from, I, 332; Hatch destroys the railroad at, 498

Turkey-hunt, a, I, 51, 52

Tuscaloosa, Ala., proposed raids toward, II, 278, 443, 444; captured by Wilson, 368, 459
Tuscumbia, Ala., Halleck orders troops to, I, 487

"Tuscumbia," the running of the batteries at Vicksburg, I, 386

Tuscumbia River, I, 386

Tuttle, J. M., at battle of Jackson, I, *422, 423

Twelfth Army-corps, ordered to reinforce Rosser's, I, 503; in operations west of Chattanooga, I, 8

Twentieth Army-corps, ordered to reinforce Rosecrans, I, 503; in operations west of Chattanooga, I, 8

Twentieth Army-corps, in left wing of Sherman's army, II, 234; commanded by A. S. Williams, 234; Sherman holds Atlanta with the, 430

Twenty-first Illinois Infantry, murdered in at Mattoon, I, 399; Grant appointed colonel, 394; personnel of the regiment, 193, 195; addressed by McClellan and Logan, 197; ordered to Quincy, Ill., 198; ordered to ironon, Mo., 198, 207; relieved by the Fifth Illinois at Palmyra, 199; drilling in battalion, 203, 204; appointment of aide-de-camp from, 205

Twenty-fifth Army-corps, movement toward Hatchers's Run, II, 450

Twenty-fourth Army-corps, assaults Fort Gregg, II, 311, 450

Twenty-third Army-corps, sent to Pulaski to join Hood, II, 551; sent to Chattanooga, 431; Schofield commanding, 441; ordered to reinforce Sherman, 441

Twigs, David E., his command, I, *59; difficulty with Worth concerning brevet rank, 73, 74; "Memorial to Congress," 74; commands division at Monterey, 89; operations at Monterey, 82, 85-87; advances toward Jalapa, 93; encounters the enemy at Cerro Gordo, 99; commands division in Scott's army, 99, 105; advances from Puebla, 103

Tyler, Pres. John, seeks annexation of Texas, I, 119, 120

Tyler, Robert O., brings up reinforcements, II, *142; steady behavior of his raw troops, 143

Tyler, M., aide-de-camp of, II, 151, 152

"Tyler," the action on the Tennessee River, I, 210; at Fort Donelson, 237; at Pittsburg Landing, 285

"Tyler's grip," I, 23, 36

Uniform, Grant's first, I, 23, 24; Grant's dislike of, 21; Gen. Taylor's dislike of, 73, 74, 195; Gen. Scott's fondness for, 166; providing for Illinois' volunteers, 185; Grant's lack of, at Cairo, 233; Grant's simplicity of, at Appomattox, II, 341, 342

Union, the, the President's constant hope for, I, 337; Despair of saving, 337, 359; Lincoln's love for, II, 289

Union, W. Va., junction of Crook and Averell at, II, 411

Union army, mode of estimating strength of, I, 183, 184

Union City, Tenn., captured by Forrest, II, 64, 425

United States, the, the foundation of, I, 174, 175; the right to suppress rebellion in, I, 356, 357; position of the President, 359; the soldiers of Europe compared with those of, 375, 377; cause of the civil war, 385, 387; condition of the separate States before the era of rapid transit, 387; the experiment of republican institutions in, 388; relation of the Mexican imperial scheme to, 389; feeling in, toward England, 391; forgetting the lessons of the war, 391; the true feeling between England and, 391, 392; the negro question, 393, 396; development of, 393-396; a new era in, 395

U. S. Army, scheme for disbanding the, I, 233

U. S. Commissioner of Education, the, I, 354

U. S. Congress, dilatoriness in providing for the Mexican War, I, 103; convened in extra session, 183; passes vote of thanks to Grant for Chattanooga, II, 32; votes a gold medal to Grant for Vicksburg and Chattanooga, 33; restores the grade of lieutenant-general, 44; thanks Sherman and his army, 257; loyalty of, 353, Pres. Johnson's conflict with, 361

U. S. Constitution, the, effect of the amendments, I, 174; the nation bound to uphold it, 175, 176; the world's changes since the framing of, 176; Confederates debar themselves of rights under, 183; Mr. Stanton's elastic views of, II, 356; question of its authority in time of war, 356, 357

U. S. Military Academy, See West Point

U. S. Navy, at Shiloh, I, 366; battle at Memphis, 317; at Arkansas Post, 366; withdraws from the Yazoo, 366; cooperation at Vicksburg, II, 234; at Port Hudson, 294, 446, 474, 479-481; cooperation at Grand Gulf, 395-397; proposed expedition against Mobile, 456, II, 49; conveying supplies on the Mississippi, I, 512; Banks ordered to turn over defense of Red River to Steele and the, II, 58, 61, 400; plan of operations on the James River, 63; cooperation asked, in changing base from Fredericksburg to Port Royal, 143; guards change of base from Fredericksburg to Port Royal to White House, 154; operations against Fort Fisher, 233, 265-270, 436, 437; Sherman opens communication with, at Savannah, 248; need of maintaining the, 391; blockades the coast, 386; operations on Broad River, 432; unsuccessful efforts to close Wilmington, 435; cooperates in capture of Wilmington, 445

U. S. Senate, confirm Grant's appointment as brigadier-general I, 295; rejects W. F. Smith's nomination for promotion, II, 31; confirms Grant's nomination as lieutenant-general, 44

Unite, Va., Summer's movements at, II, 447

Upton, Emory, his command, II, 99; in battle of Spotsylvania, *130, 131, 140; wounded, 131; promoted on the field, 131, 132; recommended for brigadier-generalship, U. S. Vols., 133

Utica, Miss., McPherson moves to, I, 413

Valley of Virginia, the, Sigel commanding in, II, 59; Hunter ordered to move up, 122

Van Buren, Martin, visits West Point, I, 22

Vanagas, Z. B., governor of North Carolina, calls for defenders of Fort Fisher, II, 264

Van Dorn, Earl, operations at and near Corinth, I, *330, 336, 338, 343, 346, 348; confronting the negro question, 339, 363; Price's reinforcements for, 377; Grant prepares for, 341; endeavors to strike the Mississippi above Memphis, 345; skirmish with Hur- bert, 340; fighting among creek, 346; defeat of, at Hatchie Bridge, 347; captures Holly Springs, 369, 361; sending cavalry against, 361, 362
Vaqueria, the, at Popocatepetl, I, 142, 143
Varioloid, advantages of an attack of, I, 186
Vicksburg, I, 221; defeated at, by Grant, II, 434
Vaughn Road, Va., movements on the, I, 456
Vera Cruz, Mex., siege and capture of, I, 91, 94-97; size of Scott's army at, 98; roads to the City of Mexico from, 98; the vomito in, 98, 152; occupation of, 134
Verona, Miss., surprise of Forrest by Grierson at, II, 315
Vicksburg, Miss., possibility of capture of, after the fall of Fort Donelson, I, 261; communications of, 317, 351, 402, 457; possibility of naval defense against, 318; plans of campaign against, their execution, orders in relation thereto, etc., 349, 351, 357-359, 369, 370, 373, 384, 390, 410, 434, 441, 447, 480; its Importance, 351, 419, 483; rumored movement against, 355; naval operations at, 384-388, 392-394, 446, 474, 479-481; Pemberton's command at, 359, 361; vagaries of the Mississippi, 361; plans of Federal force in front before, 381, 382; confusion in, concerning threatened attack on Haines's Bluff, 386; retreat of the enemy from Grand Gulf, 386; estimate of its movable force, at 414; plan to bring Banks against, 440; advance from Bridgeport on, 441; investment of, 442, 443, 446; skirmishing along the river for the purpose of assaults on the works, 443-445; enthusiasm of the troops, 444; McClellan's reported successes in assault on, 414, 445; regular siege of, 448; successes of the early part of the campaign against, 446, 447; Confederate strength at, 447; the Union and Confederate lines at, 448, 451, 452, 456, 469; details of the battle of, and losses at, 470; force of siege-artillery and use of navy guns at, 450; need of military engineers at, 450; sharpshooters at, 451; use of explosive musket-balls at, 451; a superfluity of poultry at, 452; wooden cohorns at, 453; Northern visitors at, 452, 453; strength of the besieging army, 456; Johnston desairs of holding, 458; twofold aspect of the situation at, 459; plans and movements for moving out of the city, 463; preparations for assault on, on July 6, 464; negotiations for surrender, capitulation, and evacuation, 464-472, 476, 477, 479; the historic order at, 467; expected assault on the 4th of July, 471; the last Confederate newspaper published in, 471; fraternization of opposing troops, 472, 477; last effort of the Confederacy to raise the siege of, 473; Grant's entrance into, 473; bomb-proofs in the hills, 474; effect of the surrender throughout the country, 475, 476; paroling prisoners of war at, 475; expected assault at, 476, 477; capture of, 479; personnel of the Union army after capture of, 479, 480; suggestion and development of the campaign, 481; cleaning up around, 481; Populistic expeditions around, 484, II, 40; Grant's removal from New Orleans to, I, 487; effect of the siege of, on Bragg's army, 492; troops sent to relieve Rosecrans from, 494; locomotives sent to Gen. Dodge from, 514; McPherson commanding in, II, 39; assault on, May 22, 1863, compared with last assault at Cold Harbor, 172, 173; troops sent to Red River from, 420; Canby's expedition from, 431; Grierson arrives at, 434; cavalry sent to Canby via, 443; cavalry raid from, 444
Vicksburg and Meridian railroad, broken by Grierson, I, 468
Villegle, J. B., joins Van Dorn in attack on Corinth, I, 315
Virginia, secession of, I, 183; the President's war map of, 11, 51; Union holding in, 53-54, 388; military surveying in, 146; Lee's advantage in campaigning in, 184; exhaustion of condition, 273, 293, 378; the railroad gauge in, 281; quicksands in, 303; sword presented to Lee by the State, 342; difficulty about the meeting of the legislature after the fall of Richmond, 355, 356; the question of the legislature recalling the troops of, from the Confederate armies, 356; withdrawal of troops from, 353; Halleck military government in, 342; Confederate holdings in, 355, 359; Lee reinforced from Western, 408; Breckinridge driven into, 434; Stoneman's raids in, 434, 416
Virginia and Tennessee railroad, the, expeditions against, II, 58, 61, 62, 72, 146, 306, 367
Virginia Central railroad, the, Sheridan's operations on, II, 119, 123, 127, 177, 396, 409, 414; Wright's operations on, 150, 151; Wilson damages, 165; plans to destroy, 176-177, 199; Lee's position on, 201, 205, 224; the vaquility of supply for the Army of Northern Virginia, 177; importance of obtaining possession of, 206
Volunteering, effectiveness of, after the fall of Fort Donelson, I, 261; falling off in, 308, 461
Volunteers, value of, in war, I, 41; in the Mexican war, 130; call for, 75-80, 185; raising troops at Jefferson City, 298, 299; scheme for raising volunteers in, 421-424; 417, 418, 419; Wright's operations on, 150, 151; Wilson damages, 165; plans to destroy, 176-177, 199; Lee's position on, 201, 205, 224; the vaquility of supply for the Army of Northern Virginia, 177; importance of obtaining possession of, 206
Vomito, the, in Vera Cruz, I, 98, 102
Vose, Col., death of, I, 28
Wadsworth, J., his command, II, 98; in battle of the Wilderness, 108-110; killed, * 112; succeeded in command by Cutter, 132
Wadsworth, W. H., I, 8
Wainwright, C. S., II, 98
Waldron's Ridge, I, 498; II, 34
Walker, Henry, operations at Fort Donelon, I, 246
Walker, H. H., II, 102
Walker, J. A., II, 101
Walker, J. W., operations of Texas, I, 16
Walker, R. L., II, 104
Walker's Church, Va., Grant at, II, 339
Wallace, Lew., commanding at Forts Henry and Heiman, I, 245; in siege of Fort Donelson, 247, 251, 256; promoted major-general of volunteers, 260; commanding division of Army of the Tennessee, 274; position at Crump's Landing, 275; position on morning of April 5, 1862, 290; Grant's meeting with, at Crump's Landing, 277; ordered to Pittsburg Landing, 277; delay on the first day of Shiloh, 278; arrival on the battle-field, 285, 286; position on the morning of the 5th; modification of strictures concerning his dilatoriness at Shiloh, 289; letter to W. H. L. Wallace from, bearing on the former's dilatoriness, 289; strength at Shiloh, 282; commanding at Baltimore, 216; protects the capital by his defeat at the Monocacy, 196, 197, 416

VOL. II.—33
INDEX

Wallace, W. H. L., ordered to New Madrid, 1, 219; commanding Smith's division, 274, 275; reports from the front at Pittsburg Landing, 275; mortally wounded, 279; characteristics and military service, 275; condition of his division on the night of April 6, 1862, 284; letter from Lew. Wallace to, bearing on the latter's dilatoriness, 299

Wallace, Mrs. W. H. L., forwards letter to General Grant, bearing on the dilatoriness of Lew. Wallace, 1, 289

Wallen, H. D., wounded at Palo Alto, 1, 69

Walling, W. H., reports probability of capture, 11, 427; Haines's division, 11, 427

Walt, H., Miss., Sherman's repulse at, 1, 441; conversation with Sherman at, 441, 442, 443

Walnut Hills, Miss., Wallace's reply at, 1, 441

Walnut Springs, Mex., troops at, I, 79, 80, 81

War, a pitiful side to, I, 88, 436; a fundamental principle in, 370; not an unmixed evil, II, 259

Ward, J. H. H., his command, II, 97; in battle of the Wilderness, *113

War Department, orders reinforcements for Grant at Fort Donelson, I, 243; telegraphic communication with the, 449; regulations concerning telegraph lines, II, 35, 36; places Grant in command of all the armies, 47; ignorance of Burnside's destination, 47; electioneering actions of the, 234, 235

War of the rebellion, its cost and benefit, I, 508

Warren, G. K., commanding Fifth Army-corps, II, 97, 98; crosses Germanna Ford, 97, 98; reaches Wilderness Tavern, 103; in battle of the Wilderness, 106-105, 114, 115; withdrawal of, 120; orders for May 7, 1864, 120; assails Anderson's position at Spotsylvania, 123; Sedgwick ordered to his support, 123; possibilities of his reinforcing Wilson at Spotsylvania, 123; personal characteristics and military qualities, 124, 125, 137, 139-135, 303-307; failure of attack on Anderson, 124; in battle of Spotsylvania, 125-127, 129-131, 144, 135, 137, 405; threatened with relief from command, 137; temporary breaking up of his corps, 138; movement to Burnside's left, 140; allows Ewell to escape, 143; Lee's policy to attack Hancock, and, 147; movements to Guiney's Station, 147; attempts to get between Lee and Richmond, 147; pushed to Harri's Store, 148; ordered to the South Anna, 148; reinforced by Wright, 149; Hill on the North Anna, 149, 406; ordered to send troops to Ox Ford, 150; position, May 24, 1861, 150; junction with Crittenden, 150; ordered to cross the North Anna, 154; movement, May 27, 156; position on the Pamunkey, 157; at Huntley Corners, 158; defeats Early, 158, 159; on Shady Grove road, 161; position, May 30, 165; ordered to attack Anderson, 163; repulses the enemy three times successively, 164; attack on, June 2, 165; orders for June 3, 166; in battle of Cold Harbor, 167; opinion of the situation, 168; withdraws to Cold Harbor, 177; crosses the Chickahominy at Long Bridge, 181; covers the crossing of the Chickahominy, 182; in investment of Petersburg, 191; in the Petersburg mine affair, 201, 202; captures the Weldon railroad, 211; captures camp at Peebles's farm, 219; advances on the Weldon railroad, 220; in battle of White Oak Road, 299, 450, 452; in battle of Five Forks, 303-304, 451; reports to Sheridan, 305, 422; dissatisfaction with, at White Oak Road, 306; succeeded in command by Griffin, 306, 452; engagement at Mine Run, 404; at Hatcher's Run, 422. See also Fifth Corps.

Warrenton, Miss., McClernand's position near, I, 443, 448; the highlands at, 371; at, 449

Washburn, E. B., speaks at meeting at Galena, I, 184; Grant's first meeting with, 191; visits Grant at Culpeper Court House, II, 68; campaigning experiences of, 66

Washington, D. C., origin of the Soldiers' Home at, I, 133; Lincoln's secret journey to, 182; Halleck ordered to, 325; Grant's visits to, I, 44, 45, 47, 50, 56, 58, 207, 259, 275, 295; the place for headquarters, 45, 46; collecting reinforcements in, 66; danger of Lee's moving on, 66; Confederate attempts to capture, 35, 187-185, 410, 416; transportation of wounded from the wilderness to, 116; sending artillery to, 144, 183; pontoon ordered to City Point from, 159; troops ordered to, 204, 205, 260, 416; policy of Halleck and Stanton concerning the defense of, 265; Sheridan in, 207, 222; fears of another attempt by Early to capture, 213; difficulty of getting orders to Sheridan through, 214, 221; Sheridan's return to Winchester from, 223, 223; proposed plan of campaign from, for spring of 1865, 226; Hancock ordered to organize the First Corps in, 226; a city of mourning, 339; Sherman ordered to, 374; arrival of the troops at, 376; Sherman's march to, 373, 374, 379; the grand review at, 379-380; covered by the Army of the Potomac, 401, 409; awaiting reinforcements from, 406; interruption of communication between City Point and, 417; fears of exposing, 418; Schofield reaches, 439; Schofield to secure rolling-stock from, 440

Washington, N. C., in Union hands, II, 53, 398; abandoned by the Federals, 64
Washington Territory, set off from Oregon, I, 161; Indians in, 162
Washita River, outlet of Lake Providence, I, 353; waterway for the enemy, 374
Waterloo, Ala., Forrest crosses the Tennessee near, II, 428
Watts, N. G., Confederate commissioner for exchange of prisoners, I, 479
Wauhatchie, Tenn., Hooker's movements via, I, 504; battle of, 508, 606; Grant at, II, 8
Wayne, Henry C., commanding Georgia militia, II, 244; invades S., 245; driven toward Atlanta, 247; opposing Sherman's advance through the Carolinas, 299; defeated at Dalton, 313
Wheeling, Va., early visit to, I, 16
Whig Party, the, modifies Taylor for the Presidency and elects him, I, 111, 113; death of, 136, 139; Grant a member of the, 169
White, Chilton, I, 11, 12
White, Col., I, 18
White, John D., schoolmaster, I, 11, 13
White Haven, Mo., residence of the Dent family, I, 116
White House. See Executive Mansion.
White House, Va., a base of supplies, I, 63, 167, 254; Butler reinforces the Army of the Potomac at, 157; Sherman's movements at and near, 57; 184, 293-295, 411, 415, 446; Smith's movements at and near, 154, 159, 173-181, 185, 196, 406, 410; change of base from Fort Royal to, 154; Abercrombie commanding at, 171; movement of the Eighth Corps via, 173, 180
White Oak Road, battle of, I, 229, 306, 451, 459; Miles' engagement at, 311-313
White Oak Swamp, Va., Wilson moves to, I, 410
White River, reported Confederate movement on, the, I, 219
Whiting, Col., Hooker's movements via, I, 504; Sherman's movement from, 517
White's Station, Va., Kautz's raid at, I, 407
Whiting, W. H. C., commanding at Fort Fisher, II, 264
Wickham, W. C., II, 102
Wild-aways, the, I, 173
Wiley, Cadmus M., his command, I, 102; cut off from Petersburg, 313
Wilcox's Landing, Va., movements at, I, 416, 412, 143
Wilderness, the, Va., E. B. Washburne in, II, 68; character of the country, 69, 99-102; battle of, 101-116, 103; burning of the woods in, 113, 114; effect of the battle on the enemy, 387, 407, 410
Wilderness campaign, the, an incident of, II, 68-70; a lesson of, 141; strength of the Army of the Potomac at opening of, 112; Union losses in, 183; Lee's strength at opening of, 184
Wilderness Tavern, movements at, II, 103, 411, 495; source of the N. Y. near, 126
Williamette River, mortality among Indians on the, I, 152
Wilcox, Orlando B., at Maynardville, I, 59; threatened from the East, 52, 111; encouragement for Burnside through, 12; despatch to, announcing battle of Chattanooga, 19; his command, 103; drives off the enemy at the N. Y., 252; in the Petersburg mine affair, 282; in action before Petersburg, March 24, 1863, 288
Williams, A. S., commanding the Twelfth Corps, I, 223
Williams, Thomas, cuts a canal across Young's Point, I, 187
Williams, William G., mortally wounded at Monterey, I, 87
Williamsburg road, Va., Butler attacks on the, I, 42, 141
Willow Springs, Miss., McPherson ordered to hold road to, I, 409
INDEX

Wilmington, N. C., contemplated movement against, II, 232, 435; Bragg leaves, 219, 435; attempts to capture, 239, 267, 275, 437-439; occupation of, 281, 437; Bragg commanding at, 264; proposal to send Schofield to, 275, 433, 441; proposed cooperation with Sherman from, 275, 423, 441; captured by, 279, 291, 284, 441; combined with Goldsboro and Raleigh, 290, 231, 290; operations in the vicinity of, 281; Sherman's communications with, 286; blockade-running at, 435; expedition toward (gold) from, 441; junction of column from, with that from New Bern, 442

Wilmington and Charlotte railroad, Schofield to seize the, II, 281

Wilson, James H., sent to examine Moon Lake and Yazoo Pass Route, I 575; constructs bridge over North Fork of Bayou Pierre, 406, 109; takes message from Chattanooga to Burnside, II, 28; on the Chickahominy, 79, 416; crosses Germanna Ford, 98; his command, 99; advances to Parker's Store, 103; ordered from Parker's Store to Grant's Meeting-house, 105; in battle of the Wilderness, 141; in command of the VI Corps, 1864, 191, 212; full to hold it, 123; movement to Little River, 153; movement, May 27, 1864, 136; captures Hanover Court House, 163; movement, June 27, 1864, 415; reports the enemy's position, 182; Sheridan sent to his aid, 193; at Nashville, 239; sent to Pulaski to watch Hood, 254; raid from Eastport, 366-368; military character, 367, 368; captures Howell Cobb and Jefferson Davis, 368, 439; receives news of Johnston's surrender, 368; statement about the capture of Jefferson Davis, 370; operations on the South Anna, 408; moves to White Oak Swamp, 410; engagement at Stony Creek, 415; crosses the Nottaway River, 415; sent to Sheridan at Harper's Ferry, 419; proposal that Sherman turn him loose, 430; raids in Alabama, 446, 448; defeats Forrest at Eatmezer Church, 458; captures Macen, Montgomery, Selma, Tuscaloosa, and 459

Wilson's Station, Va., Grant at, II, 324, 453; Kautz's raid at, 467

Winchester, Va., Sigel ordered to advance from, II, 65; Early drives through, 200, 201; Sheridan's camp at, 215; Sheridan's return from Washington to, 222, 223, 429; use of cavalry at, 222, 223; Averell's victory at, 417; concentration of the enemy at, 418, 419; defeat of Early at, 420; Sheridan moves from, Feb. 27, 1865, 444; prisoners sent to, 445; Hanceck concentrates at, 446

Window Shades, Va., Ferrero crosses the Chickahominy at, 181

Windsor, Conn., the Grants in, I, 1, 5, 6

Winona, Miss., Grierson's raid at, II, 434

Winslow, E. F., sent from Memphis against Price, 11, 427

Winston-Salem, capitol in, I, 177

Wis'e's Forks, N. C., actions at, II, 441

Wofford, W. T., II, 101

Wolves, noisy, I, 52, 53; resemblance to disappointed politicians, 53

Wood, T. J., at Shiloh, I, 962; in action at Fort Wood, II, 43; in battle of Chattooga, 15, 16, 18

Wooden cohorns, used at Vicksburg, I, 432

Wooden Bridge, Va., movements at, II, 129, 130; course of the Po at, 128

"Woodford," the, transport steamer at Nashville, I, 264

"World," the New York, Buell replies to Grant in, I, 296

Worth, W. J., service in Mexican war, I, 73, 74; difference with Grant's concerning brevet rank, 73, 74; commands division at Monterrey, 80, 82, 84, 85, 88; the Fourth Infantry transferred to his division, 93; forced marches made by, 94; personal characteristics, 94, 104; leaves Vera Cruz for Jalapa, 99; commands division in Scott's army, 99, 103, 109; marches to Pecos, 106; advances to Puebla, 103, 104; occupies Texcoco, 115; in battle of Molino del Rey, 117, 118; estrangement between Gen. Scott and, 117, 134, 135; at garita San Cosme, 121, 123, 124; acknowledges services rendered by Grant with the gun in the belfry, 124; placed under arrest, 134; released from arrest, 135

Wright, A. R., II, 102

Wright, H. G., his command, II, 99; in battle of the Wilderness, 101; moves to Spottsylvania, in command of the Sixth Corps, 128, 405; in battle of Spottsylvania, 129-132, 134, 137, 140, 141; wounded, 137; Cutler's division sent to, 138; recommended for major-generalship, II, 81, 103; ordered to command of the Sixth Army-corps, 139; orders for his movement to draw Lee from his intrenchments, 145; moves from Spottsylvania, 147; attacks on, 147; at Chinn's Station, 148; ordered to the South Anna, 118; moves from Harris's Store to Jericho Ford, 149; reinforces Warren, 149; position, May 24, 1864, 150; ordered to cross the North Anna, 154; ordered toward Hanover Town, 154, 155; movement, May 27, 156; on the Pamunkey, 157; advances to Hanover Court House, 158, 159; position, May 30, 161; ordered to Cold Harbor, 162; comes to assistance of Sheridan, 163; ordered to attack Anderson, 163; reconnoiters at Cold Harbor, 164; assaults, June 1, 164; ordered to assault, June 3, 165; in battle of Cold Harbor, 167; orders for, June 3, 168; opinion of situation at Cold Harbor, 168; ordered to send troops to Bottom's Bridge, 177; crosses the Chickahominy, 178, 179; ordered to guard the Weldon railroad, 190; in investment of Petersburg, 191; defense of Washington, 196, 197, 199, 416, 417; pursues Early from Washington, 197, 204, 417; ordered back to the James, 200; in command in the Valley, 222; informs Sheridan of Early's intention to crush him, 222; orders retreat to Winchester, 222; sent back to the Army of the Potomac, 224; in battle of Five Forks, 303, 304, 453; in action at Hatcher's Run, 308-310, 452, 453; destroys the South Side railroad, 310; hungry march of his troops, 323, 324; movement, April 6, 1865, 330; retreats to Humpreys Station, 331; ordered to Bermuda Hundred, 413; reinforces Butler, 414; position, March 29, 1865, 490

Wytheville, Va., Averell at, II, 411; pursuit of Vaughn to, 413; destruction of, 434; Stoneman's raid at, 458

Xochimilco Lake, Mex., I, 108
Yadkin River, the, Stoneman's raid on, II, 458
Yabusha River, the, proposed operations on, I, 334, 353; strategic importance, 369; former water route via, 375
Yates, Richard, war governor of Illinois, I, 185; Grant's meeting with, 186; assigns Grant to work in the adjutant-general's office, 186; acquainstace with, 191; commissions Grant colonel of the 21st Illinois Infantry, 194; visits Grant at New Carthage, 384; visits Vicksburg, 453
Yazoo Pass, proposed route through, I, 375; obstruction of, 375; gunboats at, 376
Yazoo River, the, proposed movements against Vicksburg with forces south of, I, 364, 369; rebel positions on, 364; McClemand reaches the mouth of, 365; providing for the navigation of, 366; Sherman and Porter withdraw from, 366; the country north of, 371; water communications of, 377; Sherman ordered to move up, 398; anxiety to secure a base of supplies on, 441; road-making on, 443, 448; Blair's raid up, 454, 455; troops on, 455
Yellow fever, at New Orleans, I, 37. See also VOMITO
Yellow Tavern, Va., battle of, II, 78, 106
York River, the, question of securing base of supplies on, II, 62, 401; Butler's movements on, 73
York River railroad, the, Abercrombie directed to strip, II, 177, 178; Butler attacks on, 422
Yorktown, Va., Capt. Noah Grant at, I, 2
Young, P. M. B., his command, II, 102; defeated at Hanover Court House, 161
Young's Point, Miss., McClemand ordered to, I, 367; Grant assumes command at, 308; the Mississippi at, 371; canal schemes at, 372, 373, 380, 381; the thought uppermost in Grant's mind on assuming command at, 370